PROCEEDINGS

THE COURT: Good morning. Have seats, please.

All right. We're here on a continued conference and motion return date in Motors Liquidation, General Motors.

As I understand it -- and I want to thank you for the agenda letter. Now you know why we require agenda letters in this Court. We have five matters on the table, four of which are contested.

Here's what we're going to do. I'm going to grant the uncontested motion; that being the one for what I'll call tag-along matters, and then I'm going to take discussion on the most important, or at least effecting the most people matter, the scheduling order. And then I'll hear the Phaneuf no-stay motion, the Elliott's issue, and at the end -- and people can leave if they're not interested in that -- the Gillispie malicious prosecution claim issue.

I know a lot of you. I certainly know Mr.

Steinberg, Mr. Weisfelner, Mr. Inselbuch, Mr. Esserman and

Mr. Flaxer. But even if I know you, I'm going to need you to identify yourselves as you come up so that we get a good recording and transcript.

Unless somebody needs to say anything, the tagalong stay motion is granted and, accordingly, when we get to the Elliott matter, which will be later in the morning,

I'll want to hear discussion as to the extent to which I should consider the Elliotts along with the other 87 actions on the one hand or whether I should hear it as a tag-along matter on the other, and subject to the mechanisms that I'm approving today vis-à-vis that motion.

On the main show make your points as you see fit, but before you're done I would like you to address the following questions and concerns that I have as a result of reading your papers. I've read them all, including the redlines of the counter-orders as you prepared them, for which I'm grateful. The blacklines made it much easier for me to see the differences in your perspective.

But there's some underlying conceptual matters highlighted by Mr. Flaxer's letter and by the GUC trust letter which I would particularly like you to address. And it seems to me there are two conceptual matters where I need your help.

The first is that I'm sympathetic to points that were made by Wilmington Trust that the threshold issues, if I were to limit them to a single one, would be unduly narrow. I will understand the desire to consider the fraud on the court claim separately, or at least the additional management issues that are associated with the consideration of that issue.

But I am interested in your views as to the best time to decide that and the extent to which that issue would or could be expected to go away on the one hand or would be lingering on the other. And I would like your help on what you perceive to be the management issues associated with dealing with a claim of that character.

even the second, as might be read from the GUC trust and perhaps the Groman issue -- letters which suggest the second being what I'll call the remedies issue, whether the last one dealing with the extent to which any of these claims, if they're not assertable against new GM or might still be assertable against old GM, should also be considered to be threshold issues because the thing I would like you guys to focus on is in that last connection if, as Mr. Steinberg is likely to argue, plaintiffs can't go against new GM, whether that means they can't go against anybody, which strikes me as counter-intuitive subject to your rights to be heard.

I think, folks -- I certainly want to hear your views. But, ultimately, I will decide, of course, what the threshold issues are, whether the threshold issues should include not just number one being the due process issue, but number two or (b), I guess, the remedies issue and (d) the issue as to whether it can be asserted against anybody else.

Subject to your rights to be heard, it seems to me that the bigger issue in determining what are threshold issues is not whether you write an additional section in your brief, but whether you have the need to address it by discovery. And if you think that instinct is wrong, I would certainly hear that view. But my tentative is to ask you folks to brief as much as you can without the need for material discovery or any discovery and to defer only those matters that require discovery to a later time, if we can accomplish that.

Obviously, I need the ability to do my job and I'm disinclined to look at the issues with blinders.

The second point that I understood Wilmington

Trust and/or the Groman plaintiffs to have addressed in their competing orders and their associated letters is when and how we should deal with any discovery. And my views are less crystallized in that regard and I want your input in that respect.

It seems to me that in a way I'm faced with a gamble because it may well be that we can't deal with this stuff, or at least the entirety of this stuff, without discovery. But the discovery has such great potential for slowing things down that I want your input on that, and when and how I should determine the need for additional discovery.

I expressly disclaim any knowledge, belief or expectation as to what that discovery would show, and I assume each of you has your own view of the world in that regard.

So with that I'll hear from you. First from you, Mr. Steinberg, and before you deal with the deeper stuff I would appreciate an update from you and then perhaps you yielding temporarily to Mr. Weisfelner, Mr. Inselbuch or Mr.
Esserman for them to supplement or correct anything you might stay vis-à-vis what you've accomplished since we were here last on what I think was May 2nd, so I can get a lay of the land in terms of where we are.

Obviously, folks, I want to get this right. But I also have an obligation to the system and to Judge Furman to keep this train moving on schedule and to try to reach an expeditious resolution here. And our challenge is going to be finding the sweet spot where we accomplish both goals.

So, Mr. Steinberg, may I hear from you first, please?

MR. STEINBURG: Good morning, Your Honor. Arthur Steinberg from King & Spalding, and I'm here with my colleagues, Scott Davidson from King & Spalding and Richard Godfrey from Kirkland & Ellis.

Your Honor, with regard to what has been accomplished since the May 2 hearing, we actually did a pretty good job getting voluntary stay stipulations signed and we had the cooperation of the designated counsel in the Page 14 context of doing that. So if there were 88 ignition switch actions that had been identified, 87 have signed voluntary stay stipulations. Phaneuf being the only one who had filed a no-stay stipulation. THE COURT: Mr. Steinberg, I'm going to sound like a broker record, but I would appreciate you pulling the microphone closer to you and speaking a little louder, please. MR. STEINBURG: Okay. I apologize for that. THE COURT: Now you sound pretty good. MR. STEINBURG: Okay. I'm usually loud enough and I --THE COURT: Yeah. I know that, but we have a full courtroom and the sound system isn't what it used to be. try to find that sweet spot again between being loud enough for me to hear you without screaming at me. MR. STEINBURG: I certainly will try not to scream at you, Your Honor. With regard to the other major activity that was done, we went through the exercise of trying to agree as to factual stipulations that would be the given record for purposes of resolving the threshold issues. And the exercise proved to be a little more difficult than envisioned, at least envisioned by myself. And we gave a little more time for a plaintiff's group to gather together their questions. And this would be my own perspective of what occurred, and I share it with you and I know that counsel will follow me and if I say something that they think should be modulated, they certainly will do that.

But when you're dealing with a large group and you're just trying to accumulate the types of factual stipulations that you want people to agree to, sometimes you function with the lowest common denominator, which means if someone wants to raise it, we'll throw it in. And the end result was, with regard to factual stipulations, we got 112 pages from the designated counsel with 713 requests plus subparts. We got 47 pages from the GUC trust with 166 requests. We got only 4 pages from the Groman plaintiffs, but after we had our first meet and confer they wanted to add another 60.

THE COURT: 6-0 or 16?

MR. STEINBURG: 6-0.

THE COURT: Uh-huh.

MR. STEINBURG: So -- and then we responded to what we thought would be the right way to go. And what you have as the byproduct of that exercise is the difference is in what we had proposed in conjunction with the designated counsel and what the GUC trust has proposed and, separately, what the Groman plaintiffs have proposed.

There's a desire on everybody's part to get the train moving, right? We were stuck in neutral. We have an MDL. There's a report that's due on August 11th. The voluntary stay stipulations have a September 1 date before someone can petition Your Honor to modulate the voluntary stay that they had agreed to.

And so the question was, after having gone through this exercise, what do we think that we can accomplish without much controversy and move the matter along in a significant way. And I think going through the exercise we realized that we probably can get to the procedural due process issue without discovery. We -- it was certainly our position that you didn't need discovery. I think the designated counsel came along with that provision and, basically, they wanted to set it up which is that if we can't agree with something at the end of the day, we'll brief the issues before Your Honor and we'll do it fairly quickly.

And after Your Honor gets it presented and it turns out like in a summary judgment motion there was a material fact in dispute, at that point in time you would be able to tailor the discovery so that we can complete the issue.

And that was the reason why you see us identifying the procedural due process issue and not contemplating discovery. Frankly, it almost is six of one, half a dozen of another because we still have to do the factual stipulations with whatever threshold issues emerges from today, but certainly procedural due process. And we gave ourselves our deadlines to do so.

And if it turns out that even though we thought we would be successful, we turned out to be less than successful and what we have outlining to you today doesn't really make as much sense as we think it does right now, we scheduled a status conference for August 5th to come back to Your Honor after we had undergone that factual stipulation exercise to see if we got it wrong. And then we would modulate the briefing schedule if we had to, but the intention was to tell everybody and to commit ourselves not to do that, to go forward on a briefing schedule and at least be able to accomplish that issue.

So why didn't we tackle the other threshold issues that are outline in the May 2nd order? On the remedy section, I think the answer to us is clear. If you can agree to do the remedy section without any discovery, I don't think anybody is -- has a problem with briefing that issue and including that as a threshold issue.

I -- to some extent there was a thought process that everything flows from the procedural due process issue, so that if it turns out that new GM -- a position was validated and that there was no violation of procedural due process, the issue of the remedy, which assumes that there was a violation, would not have to be addressed.

because as we go through our discussions the factual predicate for which they want to argue fraud on the court is the same allegations that are in the procedural due process. And there was a recognition that if new GM's position was correct on procedural due process, the remedy section and the fraud on the court section probably drops out.

And so the thought was we have one issue that's fairly clear. The other two issues may go away, but if not, they may very well engage and require discovery, sufficient discovery that will slow down the process, that the judgment was made that we should do what we can do without discovery. If it turns out that we could do more going through the factual stipulations, I think everybody will want to do more. And this is where you are the byproduct of what happened.

Having gone through a number of meet and confers and having confronted with the large number of requests that we had and, frankly, our response which was that so much of that you're asking for is not relevant and their response is, well, you're not going to decide relevance. The judge is going to decide relevance.

We then had sort of narrowed it down to what we thought we could do in due process, but we ran out of time in getting it precisely right, and there was a concern, I'm guessing on the plaintiff's part, that they didn't want to rush this aspect. They wanted to make sure that they got it right. They were really ready to start again, but it wasn't starting from square one. We had accomplished enough to know that within this time frame we were fairly comfortable that we could complete the role.

But if -- Your Honor, if you'll notice -- and I apologize that -- I was debating writing a speaking piece as to why you have these two stipulations, and I figure that my speaking piece would invite a whole bunch of other speaking pieces and I might as well do it better here.

If you notice the remedy section and how we dealt with the discrimination issue which was the letter (d).

They have taken that issue off the table; that they have agreed that they are not going to press claims based on the discrimination issue, discrimination issue being defined as that if new GM decides that it's going to pay prepetition accident victims which would otherwise retain liabilities, that that didn't create a new obligation for new GM. It would be allowed to do that.

They've agreed that that is off the table. But if you notice that there's a caveat and that was -- that was based on trying to accommodate the concerns raised by one of the identified parties that said the fact that you may be voluntarily paying what was otherwise a retained liability pursuant to the Feinberg protocol that was announced on Monday of this week should be relevant towards the remedy section. As to there's a procedural due process issue, someone believed as part of that group it's relevant to the remedy section.

I didn't believe it was relevant to the remedy section, but I sit on this side of the table and I'm not the judge. So at some point in time the back and forth ended and I had to let them say whatever it is that they want to say as to why it's relevant, and I reserved the right to say why it wasn't relevant if anybody decided that they actually wanted to brief that issue as part of the 1(b) remedies for a violation of procedural due process.

But subsumed in that issue, which is that new GM voluntarily is agreeing to pay a prepetition accident victim, that is a post-sale conduct issue. And the concern was is that someone had decided that procedural due process has a whole bunch of equitable concepts. And because of that, they could raise a whole bunch of events that took place after the sale which should be relevant for your determination of what the appropriate remedy would be.

If that was true -- and I don't think it should be true, but I'm not here to try to advocate the position. If that was true, then we have a whole bunch more factual stipulations that could get messed up and into the process and maybe potential discovery issues as well, too. And the though process after, I think, we heard it and the designated counsel heard it, was let's not try to bite that off. Let's not try to do it. We already had a failed exercise. Face reality. We're not going to be able to accomplish that.

What you get is the difference between what we proposed and what the others have proposed, is that we've decided that we can't do something and we want to accomplish what we think we can do. There actually was a proposal, Your Honor, made by designated counsel which we supported, which was if we all agree that we could do something without discovery we'll add it to the threshold issue. But if there's --

THE COURT: Pause, please, Mr. Steinberg, because that was what I almost interrupted you to ask about.

You acknowledged -- I think probably everybody in the room would acknowledge that, ultimately, the materiality call is mine, the relevance call is mine vis-à-vis any particular fact. But it seems to me that if parties can agree upon it, it's no harm, no foul, and then you can reserve your respective rights to argue whether any particular fact is relevant or not down the road.

The corollary of that would seem to be agree on as much as you can and sooner or later it will be useful, or it -- if worse comes to worse you'll have agreed on something that doesn't matter.

Do I sense a consensus on that?

MR. STEINBURG: Yes.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. STEINBURG: The issue is, is that while we can agree to that, it may not stop with just an agreement as to whether this fact occurred. There may be an issue as to whether there's discovery that's needed to evolve more facts. And I think that was the underlying issue between the designated counsel and the Groman plaintiff with regard to fraud on the court.

There was a recognition that you probably needed to take discovery because fraud on the court has the potential of a mens rea element, and there was a -- there was a concern that I don't want to do this halfway. If I'm going to brief this issue, I want to get everything out and if I get everything out, I'm in a much longer discovery plan.

And recognizing that it all derives from the procedural due process issue, recognizing that the MDL has a report and hearing on August 11th and the September 1 stay stipulation would otherwise allow people to make further applications. The goal was to do something concrete, significant, material to move this forward. And the question was how much more can we do to move forward.

To be candid, Your Honor, I could live with the other stipulations as well, too, right? I mean, all that the other stipulations say is that we may want to -- going through this exercise we may want to take discovery. And we may want to be able to add threshold issues on. I could have the same discussion with you now -- as I'm having now on August 5th and I could respond and say, no, because it's going to slow down the briefing schedule, but I will have had the benefit of the meet and confer and the back and forth on the factual stipulations.

I could say nothing about it, but I've set up a status conference and I can't prevent someone from writing letters to you asking to add something to a status conference.

We are literally fighting about a concern that may or may not occur. That's the only difference that happens here. Threshold issues may be added and someone will consider adding it if there is no discovery or there's limited discovery. Designated counsel believes that that's a fool hearty's errand. We had to pick a horse, right? We had three people going in different directions here. We had mattered the most. The designated counsel represents the super majority of the plaintiffs. They know what they think they can accomplish better than I know what I think they can accomplish.

If that's what they're telling me as to what makes the most sense under the circumstances, and I need to come to Your Honor with something because I had committed to actually do more than what we're doing now, that's what we chose. That is the thought process that new GM had and that was what was behind the stipulation at least from our perspective.

I think this is probably a good point where I concede the platform to the remaining designated counsel who can speak on the issue.

THE COURT: Okay. Is that going to be you, Mr. Inselbuch?

MR. INSELBUCH: Yes.

THE COURT: Come on up, please.

MR. INSELBUCH: Good morning, Your Honor. Elihu

Inselbuch from Caplin & Drysdale with Mr. Weisfelner and Mr.

Esserman, designated counsel.

First, as a preliminary matter, Your Honor has noted that Judge Furman has been designated by the (indiscernible) panel. He has appointed temporary lead

Pg 25 of 120 Page 25 They are with us today and I would like to introduce them to the Court. Mark Robinson, Steven Berman and Elizabeth Cabraizer (ph). UNIDENTIFIED: Good morning, Your Honor. UNIDENTIFIED: Good morning, Your Honor. THE COURT: Folks. UNIDENTIFIED: Good morning. MR. INSELBUCH: Now turning to the issues Your Honor has raised and Mr. Steinberg's points, I think it's important for the Court to understand that there was a Cchange in the facts on the table between the time we were here last time and even between the time we presented our first set of stipulations and today. On -- our stips were due on May the 28th, and as Mr. Steinberg has reasonably described, we presented an enormous number of stipulations anticipating that there would be a need for some considerable discovery on all of these issues. The best we could, the stipulations were derived from documents that the -- that GM had provided to the United States Congress, testimony that General Motors personnel had produced in various pieces of litigation. But what happened was on June the 5th General Motors delivered a report prepared on their behalf by Mr. Valukas to the National Highway Transport Safety Administration. They immediately put it on their website.

The report was delivered to the congress and in their testimony of their chief -- the chief executive of General Motors I promised that we would conduct a comprehensive and transparent investigation into the causes of the ignition switch problem. I promised we would share the findings of the report with congress, our regulators, NHTSA and the Courts.

That report in hundreds of pages detailed many of the facts that -- if not all of the facts that we believe will be relevant to any consideration of threshold issue (a), the due process issue.

Having seen that report, which we saw very soon after or about the time we had the -- just before we had the meet and confer on the first set of stipulations, it occurred to us that there -- it would be much more profitable to try and go forward in the absence of discovery using that report, the facts propounded in that report as our basis for a record.

We discussed that at that meet and confer and while there's no agreement about whether or not the report itself would be admissible into evidence, I think there is agreement with General Motors that to the extent that that report describes facts that occurred during the periods in question, that we may produce -- present those facts by way of stipulation and they will consider those.

So for that reason, we were of the view that we could go forward quickly to an -- to frame the issues before Your Honor without discovery on that limited subject. That limited subject, of course, is the threshold for everything else that may be before the Court here.

If this Court were to decide that issue against us, presumably we wouldn't have to reach the remedy issues. And if the Court were to decide that there were -- had not been a denial of due process, it's extreme -- we would view it as extremely unlikely that the Court would then find that there had been fraud on the Court. There might still be an issue before Your Honor under (e) of whether or not there would be any remedy available to the claimants, but that would be a much more limited and presumably an issue that would be based on briefing alone.

Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Pause, please, Mr. Inselbuch, because the converse isn't necessarily true. Let me just make up facts and state once now and if I need to repeat it at the end I'll state it again. I have no basis for knowing them.

I'm just talking about strictly hypothetical facts.

Suppose it were the case that those who might file claims associated with ignition switches didn't get notice back in June and July 2009 or before the bar date of their potential claims. And, by the way, I don't make any distinction now or conclusion now as to which date matters.

You might argue, you and your colleagues might argue that that by itself constitutes a due process violation. Mr. Steinberg would -- or might disagree, and then that issue would be teed up for a determination.

But it's also possible that not only didn't they get due process if that -- or notice, which you would argue is a failure to provide due process, that when Fritz Henderson (ph), the CEO back at the time was testifying before me he knew about the ignition switch problem and was intending to keep that from me. The latter, if it were so, might constitute or be argued to constitute a fraud on the Court and an offense beyond the mere failure to give notice.

I assume that your guys would want to reserve all of their rights at both levels and I assume that Mr.

Steinberg would want to reserve his rights to resist at both levels. But it seems to me that the failure to provide due process and fraud on the Court are not necessarily congruent. Is that the way you see it as well?

MR. INSELBUCH: Yes. But one is -- but the due process issue we believe now is available to us on facts that we believe can be stipulated or proven to the Court without discovery.

As you hypothesize, to get the proof that the chairman of the company knowingly mislead the Court would require at the very least discovery and probably discovery at the highest levels of General Motors.

Bear in mind that General Motors is a large public company now facing a grand jury investigation, many state prosecutorial investigations, a congressional investigation and an SEC investigation. And the idea that we could go forward and just assume that we would have easily -- easy access to discovery in that context is also, I think, perhaps not realistic. So that the idea that we could now call Mary Barra (ph) to testify in our case here without objection by General Motors I think -- I'm not asking Mr. Steinberg to comment on that, but I think it's ill-advised to think that we could have an easy path to discovery in the short term. That's why -- among the reasons why we focused on the due process issue.

The remedies issue, I was interested to hear Mr.

Steinberg discuss the remedies issue. Our problem with the remedies issue is not what we would argue with the Court.

We would argue to the Court that if you find that there has been a violation of due process, the simple answer to their motion, which is to enforce their sale order and include an injunction, would be just to deny that motion and the parties would be free to proceed to seek their remedies in the state courts, you know, on successor liability claims or whatever they might be.

We doubt very much that General Motors will concede that that's the remedy that would be dictated here. They would want to argue, and we're not sure what they would want to argue, excuse me, that for some reason or another that shouldn't follow; that some view should be taken to the remedies that would otherwise be available, how that might go, arguments about whether that would implicate claims against the GUC trust or not. We don't know where that's going to jump, and it -- and, thus, we wouldn't know how now to try and prepare a stipulated record or even a discovery record to identify what those facts might be.

We thought in the context of what is a complex set of situations that if we could move one ball forward and -- an important ball forward and get it resolved, that would be the best course to take.

I might say that we have been reasonably successful, but not as successful as we might have been in keeping the rest of the constituency advised as things develop. It's difficult for us, but we are making an effort to do that with Judge Cyganowski and others.

Now --

THE COURT: Mr. Inselbuch, sooner or later I'm going to be an ex-judge, too, but everything in this Court has to refer to her as Ms. Cyganowski.

MR. INSELBUCH: I beg your pardon. I didn't hear

Page 31 1 that. 2 THE COURT: I'm going -- the rules going to apply 3 to me when I'm an ex-judge also. But in this courtroom 4 you've got to refer to her as Ms. Cyganowski. 5 MR. INSELBUCH: Yes, Your Honor. I stand 6 corrected. 7 THE COURT: We have rules applicable in the 8 Federal Courts that apply --9 MR. INSELBUCH: I stand --10 THE COURT: -- to current judges and ex-judges 11 alike. 12 MR. INSELBUCH: I stand corrected, Your Honor. 13 Your Honor commented in your opening statements 14 that you would lean toward moving forward in a context where 15 there would be a lack -- there would not be a need for 16 discovery. We believe that, too. Our instructions from our 17 clients are, after all, to see whether we can resolve the 18 bankruptcy court issues as quickly as possible. We don't see how that can be done with discovery. We don't see any 19 20 point in kicking forward to August 8th a further argument 21 that maybe we could take some discovery. We don't think 22 discovery -- that there's any limited amount of discovery or limited amount of time within which discovery has been --23 would be available. 24 25 Moreover, no one has suggested to us what that

Page 32 1 discovery might look like, what issues the other parties 2 might -- think they might take by way of discovery. We 3 don't know what they are. As I've said before, we don't even know what the issues might be on the remedies side. 4 5 So with that, Your Honor, unless my colleagues --6 I would pass the baton. 7 THE COURT: I think I would -- well, the baton to Mr. Weisfelner or the baton to Ms. Rubin or Mr. Flaxer. 8 9 MR. WEISFELNER: I just wanted to add a couple of 10 THE COURT: All right. Come on up to the main 11 12 mic, please. 13 MR. WEISFELNER: Three points, and as quickly as I possibly can. 14 15 Mr. Inselbuch made reference to a game changer in 16 the context of the issuance of the Valukas report and I 17 agree wholeheartedly. That report is chock full of 18 information that in the process of coming up with stipulations for Your Honor to try any issue, but in 19 20 particular due process issue is critical. 21 Add to that record the fact that just before the 22 issuance of the Valukas report, as Your Honor may or may not 23 be aware, General Motors entered into a consent order with 24 NHTSA, you know the one pursuant to which they paid their 25 maximum fine --

THE COURT: I think I can get what that acronym -- is that the Highway Safety Board or whatever it's called.

MR. WEISFELNER: Correct.

And in the context of that consent order there are many iterations of the facts as they developed, a chronology of events that occurred. But understand that pursuant to that consent order you have an acknowledgment by GM that the ignition switch defect constituted a safety issue and should have required a recall. So we think that's important as well.

Again, it was put on the table in the midst of our stipulation and meet and confer process.

The other factor that came to light during the meet and confer and stipulation process was the congressional testimony that was given both by Ms. Barr (ph) and by Mr. Valukas. And remember that testimony takes two forms, as I'm sure Your Honor knows: One is the prepared statements that go into the record and the other is the questions and answers.

And we believe that there was a lot of material relevant portions of the bare testimony in particular that bear, if one looks at the penology of threshold issues, with particular reference to the due process question.

THE COURT: I hear you, Mr. Weisfelner, but I have more difficulty understanding what you're telling me now

Page 34 1 that adds in any material respect to what Mr. Inselbuch 2 already told me. 3 MR. WEISFELNER: Just --4 THE COURT: I -- hear me out, please. MR. WEISFELNER: Yes, sir. THE COURT: I'm assuming that you and your colleagues and the tort lawyers who are behind you are going 7 to take whatever facts you can and whatever resources you 8 9 can to maximize the extent to which you develop a factual 10 record that supports what you want to show, and that's fine. 11 But I don't see today's hearing as arguing -- as the place 12 to argue the merits of things that you may eventually argue 13 to Judge Furman or to a jury or juries. And what I am 14 focusing on today is case management issues. 15 How does what you're saying change what Mr. 16 Inselbuch already told me? 17 MR. WEISFELNER: Your Honor, it wasn't intended to 18 change or get beyond the focus on case management. I thought Your Honor wanted to address of all of the threshold 19 20 issues and in particular as between 1(a) and 1(b), should 21 we, could we move forward just on 1(a) to the exclusion of 22 1(b) or for that matter any other of the listed threshold 23 issues. 24 And what I thought I was emphasizing was the point that Mr. Inselbuch made very well and that was that having gone through the process of meeting and conferring over proposed stipulations which were voluminous and came from every different angle, and to which GM was unable to stipulate, having gotten this material it became clear to GM on the one hand and the designated counsel on the other hand that the right way to proceed from the perspective of advancing the process and the MDL proceedings was to do what we could do effectively and efficiently without unnecessary, if any discovery, and that is focus on 1(a).

Your Honor, the only other two points I wanted to make, not that they weren't covered, but I want to underscore them, is why do 1(a) to the exclusion of 1(b) for now. And the other factor I think, as Your Honor will agree, is that the bankruptcy process favors compromise wherever parties can get there.

In our considered judgment, one of the other benefits of doing 1(a) first and then, if necessary, moving to 1(b) is we believe a finding that we think is going to result from a focus on 1(a) will put the parties not only in a better position to brief anything else Your Honor wants us to brief or that the parties think have to be briefed, but may very well put us in a better position to reach a resolution without judicial interference.

The last point I wanted to make, and it's a correction to a question that you posed to Mr. Steinberg and I thought I misheard him or he may have misinterpreted what Your Honor was asking.

One of the things that the designated counsel on the one hand and GM on the other hand offered to Mr. Flaxer on behalf of the Groman plaintiffs and Ms. Rubin on behalf of Wilmington Trust, when we understood what the differences were between our respective orders was, look, let's finish up this stipulation process. Let's focus both on 1(a) and 1(b) with regard to the stipulation and meet and confer process. We believe that we're going to suffer and run into the same brick wall on 1(b) that we did before and we're not going to have a sufficient enough record to move forward on 1(b) at the present time.

But if we're wrong and we collectively come to the consensus that we've gotten far enough despite our views that we may not get there, and we, in fact, overcome the 1(b) problem with regard to agreed upon stipulations or, for that matter, narrow enough discovery that it makes sense to slow down the train and brief both topics at the same time or seek some limited discovery, then if we all agree then we'll come into court and tell Your Honor we've all agreed to expand the brief to include 1(a) and 1(b).

That offer did not meet consensus which I thought was where there was a disconnect between you and Mr.

Steinberg. We had proposed it, together with GM. It was

Page 37 1 rejected by Ms. Rubin and Mr. Flaxer on behalf of their 2 respective clients. So I just wanted the record to be clear 3 on that point. 4 THE COURT: Okay. Thank you. 5 Mr. Flaxer, next, then Ms. Rubin, and then Mr. 6 Golden. Is he here? 7 MR. GOLDEN: Yes, Your Honor. THE COURT: Oh, I'm sorry. If you need to add 8 9 anything to what Ms. Rubin says. 10 MR. FLAXER: Good morning, Your Honor. Jonathan Flaxer of Golenbock, Eiseman, Assor, Bell & Peskoe on behalf 11 12 of the Groman plaintiffs. 13 I would start by observing that the differences 14 between the positions in these proposed orders are narrow. 15 And what we're really talking about is after we complete the 16 stipulation process which has been difficult, but we're 17 still working at it, but not nearly as easy as maybe some had hoped it would be, there would be an opportunity for 18 parties with the knowledge of what we learned in the process 19 20 of trying to arrive at stipulations to ask the Court to 21 consider whether or not we should at that point expand the 22 issue -- the threshold issues from 1(a) to include 1(b) and in our view to also consider -- only consider -- in 23 24 including 1(c) the fraud on the Court issue as well. 25 THE COURT: For those who don't have the old order in front of me (sic), 1(b) is procedural due -- 1(a) is procedural due process; 1(b) is what we can call remedy; 1(c) is fraud on the court; 1(d) now being off the table; and 1(e) is whether any of these claims are claims against the old GM estate or the GUC trust subject to their rights to argue that it's too late to make such claims, if I understand these issues.

MR. FLAXER: Correct, Your Honor.

THE COURT: All right. Then continue, please.

MR. FLAXER: I'm going to try to provide at least our perspective on sort of where these issues breakout without advocating or being argumentative to the best I can.

The 1(a) issue (indiscernible) revolves around juris prudence that we're all in the bankruptcy world very familiar with this notion of whether a creditor at the time -- at the relevant time is a known -- I'll put that in air quotes -- a known creditor.

Our view is that the law is not such that we need to prove that very senior executives at the company knew at the time. I would say on the other hand, though, that if to take Your Honor's example that, you know, Fritz Henderson, in fact, knew and concealed it from the Court, putting aside whether or not that would establish fraud on the Court, I think it would clearly end any dispute over whether or not there had been a due process violation.

So what we're struggling with is even with the benefit of the Valukas report and, as we all know, there are more items coming out seemingly every day in the press from various government investigations and other events, we -- it's not so clear and I'm not sure the stipulation, you know, process is going to produce facts -- stipulated facts about senior level knowledge.

And, again, I'm very open to continuing the process and we'll work at it and work at it hard, but it may be a decision point when we're back here in August whether or not on the plaintiffs' side and on the GUC trust and Wilmington side we're comfortable that there's enough of a record to give Your Honor what we think should be a full enough record, and that some limited discovery may be necessary to test out how senior the knowledge goes without conceding whether or not we're required to show it.

With respect to the remedy and the due -- and the fraud on the Court issue, again, from the perspective of the Groman plaintiffs we see them as somewhat similar in terms of the record that Your Honor, we think, ought to have to decide those issues which is that we think it does expand the inquiry in two ways, two basic ways.

One is that it implicates -- how shall I say -- well, to use Mr. Steinberg's term, mens rea. You know, how bad was this. I'll just leave it at that.

We think it expands in another way which is now you -- there really is a need, we think, to get into new GM's conduct, what -- how new GM reacted to treated this ignition switch defect issue.

So we think when it comes time to consider the remedy and time to consider maybe fraud on the Court that you have two issues that, in a way, go together. So that is why the only area where we have any difference with the GUC trust and Wilmington is whether or not we should leave open for consideration adding in fraud on the Court at a later time, again, subject to everybody else's comment and subject to the Court's ultimate, you know, decision.

Other than that we completely agree with everything that Ms. Rubin put in her letter and thought that it was very eloquently stated.

THE COURT: Maybe I should have heard from Ms. Rubin first.

(Laughter)

MR. FLAXER: I just would like -- and I have a few more observations that I think are germane to the issues that the Court asked us address us at the beginning.

The -- again, we remain hopeful that the stipulation process will work, but one issue that's emerged in my mind is that these are not the type of facts that easily lend themselves to the stipulation process. This isn't stipulating, for example, to a long series of transactional documents. This is very subtle, multi-layered facts about not only who knew what when, but how much they knew, what inferences they should have drawn from what they knew, who else at the company knew that with the silos, if you will -- to use a term that's come up and I'm not conceding it, but I'll use it for convenience -- how much cross-communication was there among the silos. A series of committees considered these issues; who was on those committees. We don't have, for example, the full membership of each of the various -- I think there were at least five committees within GM that considered these issues.

Again, I'm just trying to layout for the Court (a) what some of the difficulties are and (b) where it may be possible, if necessary, to have fairly limited discovery to try to nail down some of the factual issues that may not be able to come through in the stipulation process.

Let me try to cut through as much as I can here.

I mean, I'll just observe that what we're balancing here is, you know -- well, let me state it a little differently.

We all want to expedite this process. Everybody agrees on that. Our concern is if discovery is going to ultimately be necessary, the way to expedite matters is to start the discovery sooner rather than later and don't keep

Page 42 delaying it only to start the longest piece at a later time rather than a sooner time. And with that I think I'm prepared to do maybe what I should have done the first time, which is to cede to Ms. Rubin. THE COURT: Well, certainly, I want to hear from Ms. Rubin. MR. FLAXER: Thank you, Your Honor. THE COURT: Come on up, please. MS. RUBIN: Good morning, Your Honor. I'm Lisa Rubin of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and I have with me my colleagues, Keith Martorana, who you know, and my colleague, Adam Offenhartz as well. Your Honor, you've heard from everyone this morning that there is a need for speed and the GUC trust and the unit holders, we are all for that. The question before Your Honor is how to achieve the efficiency that everyone in this courtroom desires. As an initial matter, I want to just preface for Your Honor we see the 1(a) issue differently than it was originally conceived in the May 16th scheduling order. In all of the orders presented to Your Honor yesterday, that issue is slightly reworded and I want to explain to Your Honor why. You'll see that the 1(a) --

THE COURT: Would it help, Ms. Rubin, if I pulled out your counter-order or Mr. Flaxer's, or should I just listen to you?

MS. RUBIN: Or Mr. Steinberg's because it has the same formulation. I just want to make sure that we focus the Court on this because it's an important issue to the GUC trust and the unit holders, and I want to make sure that the Court appreciates it.

What is defined as the due process violation threshold issue, Your Honor, and our counter order and also I believe in the one that Mr. Davidson submitted to the Court yesterday is whether plaintiffs' procedural due process rights were violated in connection with the sale motion and the sale order and injunction or, alternatively, whether plaintiffs' procedural due process rights would be violated if the sale order and injunction is enforced against them.

And the reason, Your Honor, that we have pressed for that formulation is because there are two very different versions of events unfolding here. You have designated counsel and the Groman plaintiffs on one hand advancing a version of events in which old GM fraudulently and knowingly concealed from the public and from this Court what happened with the ignition switch and why it was defective.

And on the other hand you have new GM, through the Page 44 1 Valukas report, saying this is just a sad confluence of 2 events through which people in GM operating in silos failed to connect the dots. And that's why we want to formulate 3 the issue this way for Your Honor because whether the 4 5 violation was knowing and these people could have been 6 identified and should have been given actual notice at the 7 time or whether, conversely, there was a failure to appreciate the connection between the ignition switch defect 8 9 and the safety concerns that have now come to light, there 10 still may be a due process violation if Your Honor were to 11 enforce the sale order and injunction against these 12 plaintiffs. 13 So with that as a preface, Your Honor, I would like to turn to some of your questions, if I might. 14 15 THE COURT: Yes. But I would like ask you to 16 pause for a second, Ms. Rubin --17 MS. RUBIN: Sure. THE COURT: -- before you get onto them. 18 Would the corollary of what you're saying, 19 20 therefore, be that to the extent that the matter is close I 21 should provide for a broader ability on the part of the 22 various parties to address issues that they think are 23 important to them?

THE COURT: All right. Continue, then.

MS. RUBIN: Yes. I believe so, Your Honor.

24

everyone that has come up to the podium this morning has told Your Honor, the process to date has been contested.

While I appreciate that all of the parties are operating in good faith -- we had an in person meet and confer session,

Your Honor, for example, that lasted nearly an entire day.

And I take to heart Mr. Steinberg's concession that the parties are not going to dispute relevance or materiality of the facts anymore, which has been a significant impediment to our reaching agreement. We will try, Your Honor, with all of the other parties to reach agreement on a set of stipulated facts. But based on the process to date, we're not particularly hopeful that we're going to get there, notwithstanding Mr. Weisfelner and Mr. Steinberg's representations to Your Honor.

So all we want to do is the following, Your Honor. We want two reservations before this August 5th status conference. We want to be able to tell Your Honor that we believe it is not in the interest of efficiency to separate the violation from the remedy, and we want to ask Your Honor -- want to reserve for ourselves the right to ask Your Honor for discovery.

Now when I say that, I don't have any particular discovery in mind that the GUC trust or the unit holders want at this juncture. All we're saying is based on the process to date and based on the conversations that I've seen unfolding between some of the other parties, it's hard for me to anticipate that we're going to come back before you in August with a set of stipulated facts that allows the parties even to brief the isolated issue of the due process violation alone.

If in the event the parties believe they need discovery on the violation question, it makes no sense to us to decouple that from the remedy. In our view we don't necessarily think that there's a lot of discovery that's needed on 1(b), and the parties who have appeared at the podium this morning already haven't conceptualized for you what discovery would be needed on 1(b) alone.

Instead, what they've said to you is we should brief, and then after that briefing if Your Honor feels that there's discovery that's germane to the issues before you that haven't been addressed by whatever fact stipulations we've been able to reach, then and only then should discovery occur. It's hard for us to understand how that serves the twin values of efficiency and judicial economy, as well as respect for the parties' resources and conservation of those resources.

In fact, Your Honor, the discovery provision that appears in the order we submitted to you yesterday, that language came from a version initially circulated to all parties by GM and designated counsel. Why they took that out of the order they submitted to Your Honor I have no idea. But it seems to us to make perfect sense to try and agree on a stipulation of facts, and then if we can't, to come back before Your Honor and explain why discovery is needed. The discovery that would be needed on violation seems to us to also be relevant to the question of remedy and to serve everybody's interest in speed.

Your Honor asked some questions about some of the other issues and I would like to address those.

With respect to the fraud on the Court issue, while I appreciate Mr. Flaxer's points, to us, as you've noted already, it's not congruent. And it likely would require discovery and discovery separate from any discovery that's implicated on the 1(a) and 1(b) issues. My understanding of the law of this circuit is that a fraud on the Court claim requires some proof that an officer of the court and not a witness or someone else involved in the proceedings has defrauded the court knowingly with the mens rea that Mr. Steinberg noted. You noted the Mr. Henderson example.

And that that fraud is against the Court alone and not the general public or one's litigation adversaries. It would inherently expand the inquiry to brief the 1(c) issue at that time and it's hard for me to see how that doesn't necessitate some discovery.

Your Honor also asked the parties to address why we couldn't brief 1(e) now. Your Honor, there are a couple of reasons why we don't believe that that makes sense.

For one, I believe all the parties are in agreement that the due process issue and along with it the remedy will likely dispose of some of the issues before Your Honor.

But even putting that aside, there are nearly 90 ignition switch complaints that are before the MDL. It makes no sense to litigate whether those claims articulate assumed liabilities under the master sale and purchase agreement, or retain liabilities under the master sale and purchase agreement without giving the plaintiffs a full and fair opportunity to amend and consolidate that complaint. It's senseless and a waste of resources to try and litigate that issue on some 90 odd complaints now consolidated before the MDL.

The bigger issue --

THE COURT: Pause, please, Ms. Rubin.

MS. RUBIN: Sure.

THE COURT: Because we have parallel proceedings in the District Court on the one hand and in this Court on the other. And I think you would understand and respect that each Court's instinct at least would be to try to minimize the extent to which it steps on the toes on the other and, also, to try to make things as easy as it could for the other.

I would have thought that the ability to amend complaints might be more appropriately decided by Judge Furman if there are complaints in actions before him which parties might want to do or not do or ask or not ask, where he might say okay or not okay in the context of an understanding of what needs to be proven and what may be proven as a matter of federal bankruptcy law.

MS. RUBIN: I understand, Your Honor.

THE COURT: That would suggest that I try to do as much as I can to help him, but that I not take away his ability to make judgments that might turn on the outcome of matters that I've decided.

MS. RUBIN: I understand, Your Honor, and certainly I don't mean to speak for or purport to speak for plaintiffs and what judgments they have about what would be appropriate in that proceeding or in this proceeding. All I am saying, Your Honor, is that it would seem to us that before we litigate which claims are properly against the GUC trust versus new GM. It would seem to me to be administratively difficult to do that in the current composition of these actions. There are some 90 odd complaints.

Let me get to the more important point, Your Honor, if I may.

As Your Honor noted at the May 2nd hearing, whether or not these claims are or are not against new GM versus the GUC trust, that would not resolve the issue of whether the plaintiffs have excusable neglect under the Pioneer standard and, conversely, whether those claims are equitably moot. Both of those determinations, Your Honor, as you well appreciate, are inherently fact dependent.

So it's hard for us to see how litigating 1(e) makes sense now for a variety of reasons. We simply see it differently.

Your Honor, the last thing I want to address is Mr. Weisfelner's point about the veto and the offer that he made to all parties. We appreciate the offer that Mr.
Weisfelner made to try and narrow the issues between the parties and to ensure that if we went forward on 1(b) it would only be based on a unanimous decision of all parties.

But we can't agree to that now without seeing how the fact stipulation process unfolds, without seeing whether the parties actually need discovery to even resolve the narrow issue, and Mr. Weisfelner and Mr. Steinberg have told you could proceed expediently.

We don't understand why there's such resistance,

Page 51 1 Your Honor, to letting us put in papers before you at the 2 end of July as contemplated in the draft order we submitted 3 yesterday. All parties are in agreement that we should come 4 back before you on August 5th for a status hearing. To set 5 in motion now a process to brief whether or not there needs 6 to be additional threshold issues considered and whether or 7 not there needs to be discovery simply seems to us to be a matter of convenience and expediency for the Court. 8 9 And with that, Your Honor, I would be happy to 10 address any questions. 11 THE COURT: No. You kind of covered them as we 12 went along. Thank you, Ms. Rubin. 13 MS. RUBIN: You're very welcome. THE COURT: Mr. Golden, do you have any need to 14 15 supplement anything Ms. Rubin said? 16 MR. GOLDEN: No. No, I don't. 17 THE COURT: Okay. Is there any need by anybody --18 oh, Mr. Inselbuch, I assume you want to reply, but --MR. INSELBUCH: Yes. 19 20 THE COURT: -- I don't know if Mr. Steinberg wants 21 to --22 MR. STEINBURG: Yeah, I do. 23 THE COURT: -- also. 24 MR. STEINBURG: I do briefly. 25 Your Honor, I think you have a sort of a microcosm of why our meet and confers take a day when we're essentially fighting over whether we should take an issue off the table or preserve it, to be able to take it off the table or not take it off the table a month from now where the major exercise being whether we're going to go through factual stipulations.

I just want to say two things, and I know this is a procedural hearing.

New GM could brief the 1(e) issue, the -- whether it's a retained liability or an assumed liability. They could do that now. The problem is, is that while we say we could do it now without discovery, others say it's a much more complicated issue. Maybe the complexity is something that I don't see. Maybe I have tunnel vision. But it just seemed to us that if everybody wanted to take it off the table for now, then I didn't want to fight that momentum.

The other thing, I just want to say that as the focus is on whether there was a procedural due process violation, I just think it needs to be made clear that we have a very strong view about that issue that old GM and new GM, as the purchaser, are different people with different responsibilities, et cetera. And the whole part of the discussion today has been GM with regard to the procedural due process. And I wanted to just make sure that at least at one point in the record I stood up and said that new GM is a separate entity who bought, with government finance money as a good faith purchaser and that we view the issues differently, including the remedies as to what should be applicable to that type of entity.

Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Mr. Inselbuch.

MR. INSELBUCH: Listening to Ms. Rubin and Mr. Flaxer I'm not sure they really understand what our reason is for going ahead with 1(a) alone.

We are no more or less sanguine now that we will have agreed stipulations that will take care of all of the facts. What we believe today, however, is that we will be able to present a record to you irrespective of whether GM stipulates to it that you will accept as factual basis and sufficient factual basis to go ahead and decide issue 1(a). That record will not be sufficient to satisfy 1(b) under any circumstances, particularly as I've said, we don't know yet what the issues will be under 1(b).

We heard Ms. Rubin describe that a particularly fact sensitive question of whether or not new GM or the GUC trust should on the one hand or the other hand be responsive if Your Honor were to decide there was a need to respond.

As -- we agree that would be a very fact sensitive question.

We don't know what the facts that would be relevant to that

-- those issues might be until they are framed.

Mr. Flaxer described the confluence between (b) and (c) by saying, well, what new GM knew at various levels like its chairman, what level they might have known at, what old GM -- I'm sorry -- what old GM knew at its various levels with its chairmen, what new GM might have known. All of those are fact sensitive questions that are involved in both (b) and (c).

We agree that may be true. That's why we do not believe there is any possibility of going forward on a record without discovery except on (a). We think it's eminently practical to do that and that's why we suggest that's where we go and not distract ourselves with trying to come up with other approaches that we can do -- deal with later after there's been a decision on 1(a).

THE COURT: All right. Thanks.

Has everybody had a chance to speak their peace on the scheduling matters?

All right. Evidently, yes.

We're going to take a ten-minute recess or to put it more exactly, I would like you all back in ten minutes after which I'm going to give you an interim ruling on the matters that we've addressed so far. And then we'll talk about the implementation of that ruling and then we'll get onto the other issues.

We're in recess until -- let's make it until ten after eleven on the clock.

(Recess taken at 10:57 a.m.; resumed at 11:21 a.m.)

THE CLERK: All rise.

THE COURT: Have seats, please.

THE COURT: Ladies and gentlemen, though I don't agree with anyone who's spoken in full, my views after hearing your respective positions are closer to those articulated by Mr. Flaxer and Ms. Rubin and I'm ruling that the issues to be briefed as threshold issues should be broadened without prejudice to parties' rights to argue on August 5th or at a later time that issues can't be justly resolved without one kind or another of discovery.

All agree, or at least all have heard or who have spoken on the subject agree, on the need to find that sweet spot between fairness and getting to the right result and achieving efficiency and speed. And I am of the view that a variant of what each of you have recommended in terms of the way to achieve that is the best way to achieve those somewhat conflicting goals.

I'm ruling that you're to brief as threshold issues Issue 1(a) which has been colloquially referred to as the due process issue, 1(b) which has been colloquially referred to as the remedies issue and E, whether any or all claims asserted in the additions which actions or claims against the Old GM bankruptcy estate and/or the GUC trust.

So the latter without now addressing and while maintaining reservations of rights with respect to issues such as Pioneer (ph) Alliance, timeliness and equitable willingness (ph).

I'm going to come back to the former issue, 1-C, on the fraud on the court threshold issue momentarily because, as you'll hear at that time, I wonder if there's a way you can make progress on that as well. All of that is without prejudice to your respect rights to argue with respect to any of them that the consideration of such an issue is, in whole or in part, premature or that you need discovery of some kind to address it. No reservation of rights may be more significant in connection with issues B and D than it is with the 1(a) issue where you figure to have consensus, that you could make a lot of progress on that right now.

But the bases for the exercise of my discretion in that regard, to the extent they weren't telegraphed in the back and forth I had, each of you will follow. When it was his turn to speak, Mr. Inselbuch then explained how the terrain with respect to the litigation of these issues had evolved. It at least seemingly is the case that it's easier to agree on facts now after the issuance of the Valukas report and that that report provides a basis either by intentions that it's an admission, a matter as to which I make no finding today, or, based upon the fact that if he found those facts, others could as well.

When Mr. Weisfelner spoke, the ones he made didn't change that or materially add to that except by underscoring that there may be even greater basis for more materials to use for reaching agreements, stipulated facts. Those opportunities presented by the matter, the Valukas report that Mr. Insulbuch discussed and anything else that might be of similar value that Mr. Weisfelner discussed provide opportunities that are too good to ignore and provide a reasonable move even if it's not an expectation that stipulated facts are going to be both achievable and provide an opportunity for avoiding the discovery that all agree or should agree would materially drag down this process. matters, collectively, coupled with the progress you made on stipulated facts so far give me some optimism that I can give you lien forbearance (ph) based upon facts as to which you have been able to reach the necessary stipulations.

I think that doing as much as we can on stipulated facts is hugely important because, as I indicated, deferring these matters to rate discovery would materially, dramatically, seriously keep adding adverts. I think it's all really bad, slowed things down before me and, as a corollary, before Judge Fuhrman. So we're going to do as much as we can to keep things moving forward as quickly as possible consistent with getting the result that's just.

And it's also so because it's possible -- I'm not signing it now but it's at least possible -- that for reasons that Mr. Flaxer and Ms. Rubin discussed, the 1(a), 1(b) and 1(e) issues may be hard to separate. With that said, if any of you think that they can and should be separated, you're free to do that in your briefs and, as I said, if you think something requires discovery, you're free to make that point to me, definitely.

Coming back to the fraud on the court issue, I wonder -- I'm not ruling today but I'm raising as an issue for you ultimately to meet and confer, whether getting as much done as possible to meet my needs and needs of, I suspect, Judge Fuhrman might have as well, suggest that if we can make any progress on the fraud on the court issue, we should at least try and I want you to meet and confer after today's hearing on whether it would be possible to brief this legal standards applicable to fraud on the court. Then to be matched up against any facts that might later be developed if and when determining that becomes necessary.

There's reference onto that relatively briefly in her remarks today. I don't know if everybody's going to go and agree with her view of the legal standards but I think that if a fraud on the court ultimately needs to be determined, determining the legal issues that provide to any such determination or the legal principles that apply to any such determination might make her strong too and merely determining or briefing the legal principles would, by itself, not necessarily require discovery but, of course, whenever you're talking about next questions of fact and law and you're measuring facts against the underlying law, sometimes they're hard to separate and I express no view as to whether the being confirmed is yet to be successful but I want you guys to think about it and at least try any such agreement or ruling by me on the legal standards. I don't expect you to agree on the legal standards. I expect you to agree or agree to disagree on whether it would be useful to also brief the legal standards, would have the potential of shaping any discovery that might thereafter be necessary -not saying it would be -- and it's at least possible that there could be unintended consequences of premature briefing on the subject. I want you guys to think about it, talk to each other and see if it would be productive. The underlying goal, once more, is and I want to keep things moving forward as efficiently and quickly as I can consistent with the adjustments.

UNIDENTIFIED MALE SPEAKER: Okay.

THE COURT: I do, however, want you to report to me on whether you have a consensus on that at the earliest practical opportunity and if there's something to argue about, I wonder if we could deal with it as well on moment to moment.

I've already discussed discovery in substantial part. I don't want to decide too much on further discovery now without determining how much progress we can make without it. Mr. Inselbuch's remarks gave me some comfort that we do have the ability to make a lot of progress without discovery and I don't want to let that opportunity slip beyond my fingers. So for the reasons last stated, I'm affirming the general shape above the order that was initially presented as modified by thoughts advanced by Mr. Flaxer and Ms. Rubin that I've endorsed in the ruling today.

To the extent nothing required a black line change, it's approved. I want the three principal parties who -- or constituencies who spoke coupled with any of the other -- what's the word that Barkley used to describe the family, not the designated counsel, the certain counsel or --

UNIDENTIFIED MALE SPEAKER: Not the parties, the parties --

UNIDENTIFIED MALE SPEAKER: Counsel for the identified parties.

THE COURT: Counsel for the identified parties to see if you can consensually agree upon weaving into one point of the order or another. It looked to me like from the document managing members and then oh, it all started with the same document that you just marked it up to see if you can give me a jointly-submitted revised order that embodies the portions of Flaxer/Rubin positions that I endorsed and, of course, consistent with the greater detail that I gave you in the ruling just now and if anybody wants any and all reservations of rights that I said you can have and I don't want you to have to work over the Fourth of July weekend but if you can get it to me sometime relatively early next week, I would appreciate that.

Anything else on this before we move on to the next issue? I see both Mr. Steinberg and Weisfelner rising. First you, Mr. Steinberg, then Mr. Weisfelner.

MR. STEINBERG: Your Honor, just from a housekeeping viewpoint, we'll prepare the draft of Your Honor's ruling circulated to the parties. I'm pretty sure we'll get a consensus on it and we'll red line it off the draft that we submitted if that's okay so at least you can see where the basis of comparison is.

I understand, Your Honor, about not changing the parts that we had agreed to. I had not, obviously, spoken to the other counsel yet but we had envisioned a different type of briefing so we had a briefing schedule that's set up if there would be a modest tweaking to reflect the fact that we'll be briefing more issues and if we could all agree that that's a fair amount of tweaking, I would hope that Your Honor would consider that when we present --

THE COURT: That's agreeable in concept. You know, I'm giving you authority to make those changes now.

If I think anything's out of the realm of reasonableness,

I'll let you know but I'm giving you and the other parties flexibility now.

MR. STEINBERG: And since I've gone through this experience before with Your Honor, it would seem to me so that we meet your expectations as well, we'd like to -- I'd like to be able to consider page limitations for the briefs with my other counsel if they want to consider it but then Your Honor will understand the type of briefing that we expect to give to you and if Your Honor thinks that that is killing too many trees or something like that, you'll be able to modulate how we should write a brief but I think we probably need page limitations or suggestions or we may need to modify your rules on this.

THE COURT: Given the importance of the issues,

I'm going to cut you some slack on this but we properly sensed that about halfway through my judicial term, I had started to impose page limits because things were getting out of hand. One thing you can do -- and I think my task here is a little easier because practically all of you are real litigators and not just bankruptcy lawyers, you can save a lot of paper by writing the briefs like litigators do, like that, because lawyers do, especially when you're talking about a lot of the wordiness that bankers and bankruptcy lawyers make when they're describing legal documents and addressing your relevant facts.

MR. STEINBERG: The only other thing, Your Honor, is that -- well, the only other thing, Your Honor, that I have and then I'll yield the platform, you had talked about reporting to Your Honor on the after the meet and confer as to whether we think it'd be appropriate to brief the legal standard on fraud on the court and if we would be able to take up the issue if there's not a full consensus on it at the August 5th status conference. Would it be helpful -- it would be helpful probably to us in order to see what kind of consensus we can get if you tell us when you would like to get that report. If we gave it to you two weeks before the August 5th status conference, would that be sufficient time to -- that will give us -- we will have met and conferred a few times on the factual stipulations and we will have

THE COURT: I want to get others' views on whether they concur with that proposal and I guess my dream scenario would be if, as you guys sometimes can do, you can give me a joint letter saying you've agreed on this or we don't agree on this, our consensus is on this, we couldn't reach consensus on that so that I -- minimizing the extent of the papers that need to be done on it. If you think after you've talked it requires more extensive discussion on that, I would be inclined to have a note in mine but I don't want to sign off on this issue, thus, until I've heard them.

MR. STEINBERG: Right. Your Honor, just so it's clear, we're amenable to whatever date there was. I just understand that when we did the last scheduling order, we were supposed to deliver things to Your Honor on July 1 and Your Honor was getting papers and we appreciate it very much at 5:00, 6:00, 7:00 o'clock this even -- yesterday evening and sometimes we can do better if we had a deadline so that Your Honor could have papers in a more orderly fashion. So that's the only reason why I suggested it.

THE COURT: Well, that -- I well understand how hard you guys are trying on this. I'm not criticizing anybody for what happened yesterday but, yeah, if you can, that would be helpful.

MR. STEINBERG: Okay.

THE COURT: Mr. Edward Weisfelner.

MR. WEISFELNER: Your Honor, with great trepidation, I rise to ask Your Honor for a 15-minute adjournment. I have a limited number of questions and requests for clarification with regard to your order. I

Page 65 1 don't feel like eating my shoe and since I have the lead MBL 2 counsel sitting right here in court and my other co-counsel, 3 I'd like 10 or 15 minutes to make sure that the points of 4 clarification I seek are ones that are shared across the 5 board with the MBL lead counsel and the other designated 6 counsel. 7 THE COURT: If there are matters of clarification that's contrasted to re-arguing anything, I've decided you 8 9 can have that 15 minutes so we'll reconvene and we'll --10 MR. WEISFELNER: And, Your Honor, may we use the conference room? 11 12 THE COURT: That will be --13 (Asides.) 14 THE CLERK: No. 15 THE COURT: Well, why not? 16 MR. WEISFELNER: Well, I'll use any conference 17 room. 18 THE COURT: Yeah, you can use my conference room after I and my (indiscernible) and if you'd come in through 19 20 the back door, you can come in? 21 MR. WEISFELNER: Thank you, Judge. 22 THE COURT: We're in recess. 23 THE CLERK: All rise. 24 (Recess taken at 11:44 a.m.; proceedings resume at 12:07 p.m.) 25

Page 66 1 THE CLERK: All rise. 2 THE COURT: Have a seat, please. 3 Mr. Inselbuch, you're rising. MR. INSELBUCH: Yes, sir. One point, briefly. 4 5 understand your ruling, Your Honor. 6 With respect to 1(b), as I indicated to you 7 earlier, we are at a loss to know how to go forward to produce factual stipulations or a record on 1(b), because 8 9 what we have, by way of a record here, is a motion by New GM 10 simply to stay these lawsuits. Could we have a direction 11 from you that New GM tell us, within the next week or two, 12 if they were to lose on 1(a), what they would be arguing the remedy would be under 1(b) so that we could understand what 13 14 factual basis, if anything, in addition would be necessary 15 to go forward without discovery? 16 THE COURT: What is the hole (sic), Mr. Inselbuch? 17 I got the impression from the colloquy that I heard 18 beforehand that the array of facts as to which agreement was solicited was so enormous that the real issue was the extent 19 20 to which they might turn out to be irrelevant rather than 21 even more facts for which you would want stipulations? 22 MR. INSELBUCH: I don't think that's correct, 23 Your Honor. The debate on the early set of stipulations was 24 much improved by the delivery of the Deluco report. What we 25 are focusing on here is we had the same issue without the Deluco report. We can't know, as we sit here today, what issues, what factual matters we might need to respond to an argument if we don't know what it would be about what New General Motors might say the relief ought to be if they lose and Your Honor holds that there was a violation of due process. And we think that, if we're to try and move forward on this in some reasonable way, we need to have that to scope out what we need to do.

THE COURT: Let me hear from you, Mr. Steinberg.

MR. STEINBERG: Your Honor, the 1(a) issue, the procedural due process issue, is their defense to my motion to enforce. They then will have to tell Your Honor what the remedy they should be asking for in light of having won the first issue, if we have to deal with that. I'm struggling to try to figure out what it is that they expect me to say when it's their defense that they now have to postulate the remedy.

The real practical answer is is that we have set up an opening delivery of factual stipulations by either Monday or whatever date that we agree on should be relaxed because of the additional issues. We then have two weeks to then try to figure out how to get a bundle of factual stipulations.

We will have delivered what we thought should be done on the 1(b) issue on the day that we're exchanging factual stipulations, and we'll have 12 or 15 days to try to figure it out. I'm not exactly sure why they think they need to impose other requirements on their affirmative defense.

THE COURT: Is your position, in substance, likely to be that, whether or not you win on a 1(a) issue, you still don't have to pay?

MR. STEINBERG: That's correct, because the obligation is Old GM who committed the procedural due process violation, and we're the good faith purchaser for value and that we're entitled to the protections that the courts have affirmed. That would be our position. I think I've said it to them.

THE COURT: Without ruling on the merits of the position, I can't say that what you just told me came as a surprise to me.

MR. STEINBERG: Right, and it doesn't come as a surprise to them. I've said it every chance I have.

THE COURT: Mr. Inselbuch, I don't see the need to be as significant as you do. If any further clarification of what Mr. Steinberg just told me is practical, give it to Mr. Steinberg. To the extent that you've pretty much said it all, then work with that, Mr. Inselbuch.

MR. INSELBUCH: Yes, I think we have their statement. We don't need a ruling from Your Honor. Thank

Page 69 1 you. 2 THE COURT: Okay. 3 Now, Mr. Weisfelner, did your issues drop out, or do you still need stuff from me? 4 5 MR. WEISFELNER: Our issues did, in fact, drop 6 out, but I appreciate the opportunity. 7 THE COURT: Okay. Good. All right. Then am I correct -- directing this 8 9 question at those who weighed in in the first phase of 10 today's hearing -- that we're done with that and I can turn 11 to Phaneuf? If I'm mispronouncing the name, I apologize. 12 MR. WEISFELNER: Your Honor, I think you can so 13 long as Your Honor's prepared to dismiss those of us that 14 have other places to go and don't need to sit through the 15 balance of Your Honor's (indiscernible - 1:39:01). 16 THE COURT: Yeah, sure. 17 I asked my law clerks to inquire of you all as to 18 whether you have a preference, now that it's about quarter after 12:00, to go straight through. My tentative is to go 19 20 straight through, but, if anybody has a different view, I'll 21 hear it. 22 MR. STEINBERG: No, I have a very strong personal 23 view to go straight through. I have an obligation to meet a 24 family member who's going through some testing in the 25 afternoon. So, if I can in any way be able to try to

Page 70 1 accommodate, I'd like to. 2 THE COURT: So you'd like to keep going, too? MR. STEINBERG: I would, yes, Your Honor. 3 4 THE COURT: Okay. 5 Let's go -- Ms. Rubin? 6 MS. RUBIN: Your Honor, I --7 THE COURT: Pull a mike close to you so I can hear 8 you, please. 9 MS. RUBIN: Oh, I'm sorry, Your Honor. I would 10 just ask that, pursuant to Mr. Weisfelner's request, the 11 briefing schedule for the Gillispie matter concerns the GUC Trust as well. I believe that we have a resolution of that 12 13 and can report to Your Honor in short order. If we could 14 turn to that, that would allow Mr. Weisfelner's request that 15 the rest of us be dismissed as well. 16 THE COURT: Let's do it this way, folks. Anybody 17 who wants to leave right now who doesn't care about the 18 Phaneuf, Elliott, or Gillispie is free to do that. 19 Then I'm going to put your matter up next, 20 Ms. Rubin, and I sense that you're basically giving me a 21 report on what your deal is, assuming I'm okay with the 22 deal. 23 MS. RUBIN: Yes, Your Honor. 24 THE COURT: Good. Okay. (Pause) 25

Page 71 1 MR. STEINBERG: Your Honor, if I could just say 2 quickly about Gillispie so that I think Ms. Rubin would like 3 to then depart as well. We have spoken with counsel for 4 Mr. Gillispie. We agreed on a briefing schedule. 5 THE COURT: By the way, is he here in the 6 courtroom or on the phone? 7 Evidently, not. MS. RUBIN: It's my understanding that Mr. Owens 8 9 intended to be on the phone. 10 Mr. Owens, are you on the phone? 11 THE COURT: Mr. Owens? 12 Is that Mr. Gillispie's counsel? 13 Are you on the phone? I sense not, but, if you're reporting on something 14 15 where he might sign a stip. or consent order, why don't you go ahead, you and Ms. Rubin, please? 16 17 MR. STEINBERG: Your Honor, we agreed, both the 18 GUC Trust and New GM, to respond to his motion on August 18th. He would file a reply on September 18th, and 19 20 then, the Court would schedule an oral argument, to the 21 extent the Court figured that oral argument was necessary. We're prepared to put this into a stipulation so it is of 22 23 record, but those were the dates that have been --24 August 19th instead of August 18th. So it's August 19th, 25 September 18th, and we'll put that into a briefing schedule.

Page 72 THE COURT: Do you have a desire to be heard 1 2 beyond that, Ms. Rubin? 3 MS. RUBIN: No, Your Honor. THE COURT: Okay. 4 5 Then, that's fine, but especially since that 6 attorney isn't here, put it in the form of a stip. or a 7 consent order, and I'll so order it once I know that he's on 8 the same page as the two of you guys. 9 MR. STEINBERG: All right. Thank you, Your Honor. 10 MS. RUBIN: Thank you, Your Honor. 11 THE COURT: Okay. And you can take off, if you 12 care to, Ms. Rubin. 13 Can I hear from counsel for Phaneuf now? Would 14 you come up, please? 15 And let me get appearances. Because, while I know 16 some of the old timers in this court, I don't know 17 everybody. MR. BLOCK: Good afternoon, Your Honor. Jeffrey 18 Block, with the Block & Leviton firm, for the plaintiff 19 20 Phaneuf, and you were pronouncing it correctly, yes. 21 THE COURT: Okay. 22 MR. GARBER: Todd Garber, from Finkelstein, 23 Blankinship, Frie-Pearson & Garber, for Phaneuf. 24 THE COURT: Okay. MR. FLEMING: Joel Fleming, also of the Block & 25

Page 73 1 Leviton firm, for --THE COURT: Okay. 2 3 Am I going to hear mainly from you, Mr. Block? MR. BLOCK: Yes, Your Honor. 4 5 THE COURT: Okay. 6 Have a seat, though, please. 7 And, of course, I know Mr. Steinberg. Make your arguments as you see fit, but I would 8 like both sides to be brief, because I have read the papers, 9 10 and I don't think the issues here are as difficult or 11 complicated as those that we heard before. 12 The issue, it seems to me, Mr. Block, is that, on 13 this lay of the land, there is a basis for considering your 14 client or clients any differently than those in the other 87 15 actions that are before me. On page 12 of his answering 16 brief, in particular. Mr. Steinberg contends that at least 17 one of the vehicles -- or page 11 and 12 -- in question is a 18 2006 Chevy, which, as its name would suggest, was a vehicle manufactured by Old GM, and, if New GM did something bad, a 19 20 matter which I don't decide, it at least seemingly walks, 21 talks, and quacks, like a lot of the stuff that was done 22 that was bad, took place before the July 2009 sale. There is also an issue in this and other cases 23 before me as to whether if New GM or if Old GM or any GM did 24 something bad, it related to an ignition switch that was installed in a vehicle and that it's at least arguable that liability for constructing or designing of bits which would be associated with the designer/manufacturer of that switch, both matters which, if true, are established would suggest that the 363 sale order applies in the first instance to any liabilities that are asserted. Apart from that, I have some difficulty seeing the prejudice to your client if I were to reach preliminary injunction analysis doctrine as to how you would be harmed in any material respect, if at all, when you're treated like everybody else, and at least most judges are not of a mind to manage litigation for the benefit of 1 out of 88 constituencies.

I sense from your papers, both your original motion and your letter, that you're relying on the fact that one or more of your plaintiffs might have acquired their vehicles after the sale order, but I need to know the extent to which either any of the assumptions I made before might be matters as to which you're disclaiming a basis for liability or whether we have a situation which I may have to deal with later, because I'm confident that there are at least 1 of the other 87 litigants who have the same situation where they're hanging their head on both pre and post-sale liability, but Mr. Steinberg may contend -- I'm not reading his mind. I haven't spoken to him, but he may contend that the fact that part of the liability is premised on prepetition or presale acts -- affects the analysis.

So I need help from you as to why I should treat your case different than any of the others. As you can sense from what I said, my tentative, subject to your right to be heard, is to treat you like the other 87. So come on up, please.

MR. BLOCK: Thank you, Your Honor, and I appreciate your comments, and obviously, I'll try and be as brief as possible.

First, all of our clients, not just one, but all of them purchased their vehicles post-bankruptcy. So none of our purchasers are pre-bankruptcy purchasers, and we think that's what makes our claims different than the other 87, and my understanding is the other 87 have both pre and post. So they're a common nature.

So our view is that, when you have people who bought post, as we put in our papers, we view ourselves as what are the future claims. So none of our clients had any claim against Old GM at the time of the bankruptcy, and, to us, we view the case exactly, even stronger, but exactly like the Grumman Olson case that we cited in our papers, and that was a case before Judge Bernstein, and that was a truck component that was manufactured.

The manufacturer of the truck component filed for bankruptcy. Another company, Morgan, purchased all the assets through a 363(f) sale. After the bankruptcy, a plaintiff was injured and brought a product liability suit against Morgan. Morgan said your claims were released as part of the sale, as part of the bankruptcy. Can't bring a claim.

Judge Bernstein ruled no, because a constitutional due process issue. If he didn't have a claim at the time of the bankruptcy, the claim cannot be released, and, also as part of the bankruptcy code, which is since you did not have a claim at the time of the bankruptcy, again, it cannot be released, and that decision was affirmed by the district court.

We know that we haven't found a case in which any Court, a bankruptcy Court, has ruled that a future claimant -- their claims can be released through a bankruptcy, and I know this is a question that the Second Circuit did not address in the Chrysler case. So it is an open question, but that's why we view ourselves in a different situation than the others, because all of our purchasers were postbankruptcy. So we don't think that there are any claims that they have against New GM that can be released, because, like I said, they never got notice of the bankruptcy, and they could not have because they were not claimants at the time.

So that's why we think our case and our claim is different from all the other 87, which is why and the only reason why we did not agree to the sett. (sic). I also think, Your Honor, that in his order from, I think it was, last week, Judge Furman in talking about the organization of the cases, notes that there are issues in the bankruptcy court, and I think a read of his order is he is looking for guidance from Your Honor as far as what is going to happen with the claim.

We think it would be beneficial to the district court if we're right, and, if I assume I'm right, that folks who purchased after bankruptcy who never got notice of the bankruptcy, could not have gotten notice because they didn't have a GM car, therefore, didn't have a claim -- they're future claimants. Their claims could not be released. I think that would be helpful to the district court in organizing the cases and determining how the cases go forward.

If I am wrong and future claims can be released through the bankruptcy, then I think obviously that point to be made to Judge Furman doesn't need to be made, but that's our view, and that's why we think we're different. And there are two groups of folks that we have here.

We have people who purchased their cars, new cars, from New GM after the bankruptcy. We have a second group of people who purchased used cars after the bankruptcy.

1 THE COURT: Purchased used cars after the 2 bankruptcy but that were manufactured before the bankruptcy? 3 MR. BLOCK: Yes, Your Honor, yes. 4 THE COURT: And I take it that there are more 5 variants even than those that you mentioned such as those 6 that might have parts in them that were made before the 7 bankruptcy but were either old cars, on the one hand, or new cars, on the other. There's a whole bunch of different 8 combinations and permeations, I take it, that's self-9 10 evidence to all of us? 11 MR. BLOCK: Absolutely, Your Honor, but we also 12 think, if you go back to the Grumman Olson case, what 13 Judge Bernstein found where there was no dispute that the 14 part issued or the product at issue was manufactured, 15 designed and manufactured by the bankrupt entity, and the 16 bankrupt entity was -- all the assets were purchased in the 17 sale by the new company. Judge Bernstein still ruled it 18 doesn't matter. That claim cannot be released, because you were 19 20 not a claimant at the time of the bankruptcy. So that was 21 completely irrelevant to his decision and completely 22 irrelevant to the district court when the district court 23 affirmed. 24 THE COURT: Do you agree that there may or may not 25 be an overlap between what you said and the fact that,

1 whether or not it's a claim that could have been asserted in 2 the bankruptcy, there is an analytically distinct issue, 3 possibly with the same conclusion, possibly with a different 4 conclusion, as to whether New GM assumed any particular 5 claim? 6 MR. BLOCK: Well, you could go through an analysis 7 as far as whether or not New GM assumed the claim, but I think the way we're also looking at this is I don't even 8 9 think you need to reach that level of analysis, because I 10 think, again, the Grumman Olson case turns on the simple question that because you did not have a claim at the time 11 12 of the bankruptcy, you could not have gotten notice of the bankruptcy, and therefore, any claim that you have could not 13 have been released. So you are the future claimant, and 14 15 future claims cannot be released through --16 THE COURT: I understand that argument, Mr. Block. 17 MR. BLOCK: Okay. 18 THE COURT: The question is when and how that argument should appropriately be determined. I take it you 19 20 were sitting through the very lengthy proceedings that 21 preceded your argument? 22 MR. BLOCK: I was, Your Honor. 23 THE COURT: And you heard the lawyers. I think we 24 call them the designated counsel, who were speaking for 25 ignition switch action plaintiffs. I take it you shared my albeit better or worse than you're making them.

view that they're pretty good lawyers?

MR. BLOCK: They're excellent lawyers, Your Honor.

THE COURT: And one of the things that might inform the exercise of my discretion, if I were to consider it merely a matter of discretion, is whether they might be thinking of some of the very same arguments you're making, and they may be making the same arguments you're making,

MR. BLOCK: I would venture to guess they may make them better than I'm making them. Hopefully, I'm as equal to them.

THE COURT: Well, you've already proven that you're a capable lawyer, but the underlying point, of course, is a different one.

MR. BLOCK: Well, --

THE COURT: Which is whether I should be deciding issues of the character that you are raising before I give all of the other 87 lawyers a chance to do their thing because I haven't spoken to them any more than I've spoken to Mr. Steinberg, and I'm thinking merely in terms of that which is foreseeable, but I think it's foreseeable that they're going to be making an argument that has some similarities, at least, to the one you're making.

MR. BLOCK: Well, I think they -- I would suspect they will, Your Honor. What I would just say in response to 1 that is obviously, we are responding to Your Honor's 2 May 16th order that we received opposing the stay, and those 3 are the reasons why we, for our case, oppose the sett. (sic), and procedurally, that's how we got here and the 4 5 timing of how we got here. 6 Number two, I don't know why nobody, in my view, 7 nobody has raised what I think is a very straightforward 8 threshold question as far as whether folks who bought after 9 the bankruptcy who I'm calling the future claimants should 10 be part of the determination as to whether the release 11 applies to them or the injunction applies to them because 12 our view is we think the case law is very clear that it doesn't. I think if Your Honor were to agree with me and 13 14 were to issue that ruling, I think it would be highly 15 beneficial to the designated counsel. I think it would also 16 be very helpful to Judge Furman as he decides how the cases 17 should be organized and moved forward, and obviously, that's 18 going to be up to Judge Furman to decide. 19 THE COURT: Okay. Anything further? 20 MR. BLOCK: No, unless you have anything else, 21 nothing else. 22 THE COURT: No, you kind of helped me as you went 23 along. 24 MR. BLOCK: Okay. Thank you, Your Honor. 25 THE COURT: Thank you.

Mr.	Steinberg?

MR. STEINBERG: Yes, Your Honor. I think your questioning put your finger on a lot of the issues. One is counsel admitted that, as part of the 87 litigation, there are clearly people who have asserted that they bought a car post-sale that was a prepetition car, and therefore, --

THE COURT: Pause, please, so I keep up with you.

This one of the permeations is a post-sale by but a presale manufacture?

MR. STEINBERG: That's correct. So, of the 87 actions, probably 83 are class actions. Many of them define the class that includes the 2010 Chevy Cobalt, which, by definition, was after the sale, but understand this as New GM's position, and I'm trying to be very careful not to make substantive arguments, but I think I need to illustrate --

THE COURT: That's especially important in light of all the people who have already left the courtroom today.

MR. STEINBERG: That's correct, Your Honor. New GM's position -- and it's stated this many, many times publicly as well, too -- is that New GM has never manufactured a defective ignition switch. The reason why that the defective ignition switch had stopped being manufacturing prior to the sale.

The reason why the 2010 Chevy Cobalt was recalled was that there was a concern that a car with a good ignition switch may have been repaired with an old GM defective part by a dealer or someone else, and, to be on the safe side, they recalled a million cars when they have always said that the likelihood that any of them actually had this repair is very small, but they didn't know which were the cars that potentially had it. So they withdrew them all. So our view is that every post-sale vehicle has an old GM part and implicates the sale order.

The second thing is, as a practical matter as you sort of struggle as to why they are different or not, the Phaneuf litigation is part of the MDL, and yesterday you got a letter from counsel suggesting that Judge Furman's letter indicated -- and I'll use the --

THE COURT: By that, did you mean his --

MR. STEINBERG: His July 1 --

THE COURT: -- his order of June 24?

MR. STEINBERG: Yes, Judge Furman's letter of June 24th, which was attached to our submission yesterday.

But counsel, Todd Garber, submitted a letter on behalf of Phaneuf, and, in the third paragraph, it said, "The district court's June 24th, 2014 order, attached to GM's letter as Exhibit B, made clear that the district court contemplates the possibility of separate litigation tracks for pre and post-bankruptcy purchasers." The fact of the matter is is that there's nothing in Judge Furman's order that actually says anything remotely close to that.

THE COURT: Your position, I take it, is that the order speaks for itself?

MR. STEINBERG: That's correct.

THE COURT: And that I can and should simply read it?

MR. STEINBERG: That's correct, Your Honor. I know that I couldn't find it, and, when I asked counsel before, he pointed to a provision that he was relying on, but that provision, in no way, says anything about presale versus post-sale. So, if I'm correct, then they're in the MDL. They're going to move at the pace that the MDL moves. They're not going to move separately, even if Your Honor said they could move separately.

would be discombobulated and the process before Judge Furman would get further confused because, in every voluntary stay stipulation that was agreed to, there was an agreement that New GM made that, if someone was allowed to get out ahead, everybody would have the right to come to Your Honor and say I want to go at that same pace. So, to let the pimple on the tail wag the dog here where 1 out of the 88 says I should be able to move forward in what, at the end of the day, is an MDL, it could potentially upset the other 87, and whatever we decided earlier today about threshold issues and an orderly way of presenting these issues will very well go by the boards.

Other thing is is that, when you read their papers and when you actually listen to their argument -- and Your Honor was right about this, the Grumman Olson case is the procedural due process case that every designated counsel is going to argue. We have a response to it. If the counsel couldn't find cases that support our position, they'll see that in our threshold brief, but there was actually a case out of Chrysler that supports our position and distinguishes Grumman Olson.

I say that, Your Honor, not to try to argue

Grumman Olson before you, only to illustrate that the people who walked out of this courtroom are going to argue the effect of Grumman Olson. Half of that argument, half of their papers is a procedural due process argument.

The other half of their argument is the (1)(e) issue that we talked about before. Was this a liability that was assumed by New GM? They take the position that clearly it's not. We're going to take the position clearly that they didn't -- I'm sorry. They're going to take the position that we assume this liability. We're going to take the position that we clearly did not.

Interpretation of the asset purchase agreement, the MSPA -- it's all going to be for Your Honor's review, but those are the threshold issues.

THE COURT: And either you or your opponents or both are going to address decisions like my Castillo decision?

MR. STEINBERG: Yes.

THE COURT: Where I dealt with somewhat similar issues?

MR. STEINBERG: That's correct. The other thing that Your Honor was correct also in pointing out to our brief where we reviewed the complaint, we reviewed the allegations. It's clear that what they're alleging is Old GM's conduct as it relates to the potential liability for what they -- for the vehicles they bought -- successor liability, because that word is actually in their complaint a couple of different occasions -- Old GM vehicles and Old GM parts, and that, by definition, implicates the sale order and injunction.

And, once the sale order and injunction is implicated, they never should have brought their action, but they now have brought their action. It's up to Your Honor, as the person who had exclusive jurisdiction, to determine how these claims are to be resolved.

This morning's hearing was how these claims are going to be resolved, by bifurcating and dealing with the threshold issues. They are not anywhere different than anybody else.

I have, Your Honor, reasons to say why I believe that substantively they're wrong, but I'm going to adhere to the admonition that you gave me already, which I had tried to check myself, which is I'm not going to try to argue the substance as to why this was a retained liability versus an assumed liability. Only that ignition switch was mentioned.

If you look at the plaintiff Lisa Phaneuf, she has got a 2006 Chevy Cobalt. It was bought from a non-GM dealer, and they're alleging liability to us under the rubric of language that includes successor liability, and we think that implicates the sale order. They could disagree.

I know that people are not going to agree to everything that I say, but that's the process. The process is I'm going to have an ability to argue that. Someone else, including them, will argue all of these issues, procedural due process, whether it's an assumed liability, retained liability, and we're going to have that issue resolved by Your Honor, and we're prepared to take that issue on.

It would be a mistake if Your Honor allows them to take this on a different track when so many of the other plaintiffs have the same claim and have defined their class to include post-sale classes, and especially because they want to be able to make the arguments. And subsumed in what we were talking about before was these arguments. Subsumed in the exchange of factual stipulations are some of the things that are recited in the complaint.

they will have their time. They will have their day in court. We will have the opportunity to defend it.

But to allow them to go forward when they're similarly situated to everyone else, especially when they're part of an MDL where they can't move it in any different way, would be a mistake for what we're trying to accomplish here.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you, Mr. Steinberg.

MR. BLOCK: Thank you, Your Honor. Just a couple

Mr. Block, I'll take a reply.

about retained versus assumed liability, who manufactured the parts. Our view is -- and we think, under the Grumman Olson case, it's clear -- none of that matters. The question is did folks who purchased cars after the bankruptcy -- can their claims be released when they are future claimants. We think the law is clear the answer is no. So we don't think that really matters.

Second, as far as allowing us --

THE COURT: Pause, please, Mr. Block.

MR. BLOCK: Yes.

25 THE COURT: And I must confess that I read your Page 89 1 brief and your letter, and maybe I should have picked it up. 2 But do you have a punitive damages claim in addition to a 3 compensatory damage claim? MR. BLOCK: I don't believe we do, Your Honor. 4 5 THE COURT: Okay. Continue. Thank you. 6 MR. BLOCK: Okay. Second, as far as the argument 7 of us getting out ahead of everybody else, I don't really 8 think that that is a valid argument. 9 MR. STEINBERG: May I just show him where he has 10 punitive damages? 11 MR. BLOCK: We do? Okay. Then we do have 12 punitive damages. 13 THE COURT: Okay. MR. BLOCK: He remembers my complaint better than 14 15 I do. 16 As far as getting out ahead, Your Honor, I think our view is that, right now, there are two stays in place. 17 18 There is a bankruptcy court stay, which we don't think applies to our claims, and there's a district court stay 19 20 pending the organization. 21 If Your Honor agrees with me, we are still stayed by Judge Furman, and Judge Furman will decide whether, in 22 23 essence, we get out ahead or we don't, and he's going to 24 organize the cases, and we just think it would be beneficial 25 for him in terms of organization, in terms of scheduling as to whether or not our view is the correct view. And, if it's not the correct view, then it doesn't matter.

Third, just very briefly, as far as the letter,

Your Honor, I'm sure you're going to read Judge Furman's decision. We clearly were not trying to mischaracterize what he said. Our just view of the letter was he notes that there could be certain claims that are now pending that can go forward or that cannot go forward, depending on how

Your Honor rules, and that's the only point we were trying to make, that this would be beneficial for him.

THE COURT: Okay.

I don't need to take a recess.

MR. BLOCK: Unless Your Honor has anything further, I'm done.

THE COURT: No, thank you.

MR. BLOCK: Thank you, Your Honor.

16 THE COURT: Sit in place for a second, gentlemen.

THE COURT: Mr. Block and Mr. Garber, I'm ruling that the stay should remain in place, subject to the usual right to ask that I revisit the issue after September 1st that all of the other tort litigants have and that your claims will be treated the same as the other 87, and I'm going to summarize the reasons for that orally.

What I would like you to do -- and I'm not going to put a gun to your head to give you a deadline to do it, but I would appreciate an answer as soon as practical, and you should advise my chambers with a copy of your communication to Mr. Steinberg and all of the parties who I heard from today as to whether you would like to take an appeal. If you do, I will write an opinion on it, but, in the nature of the way that I have to triage my matters, I've found that, very often, when I summarize a ruling orally, that it's sufficient, except for an appellate record, and then, I'll decide whether I need to write to assist an appellate Court.

I am ruling more specifically that the sale order now applies, though it's possible, without prejudging any issues, that, after I hear from the other 87 litigants, I might ultimately rule that it does not apply to some kinds of claims and that, even if the sale order didn't apply, that New GM would be entitled to a preliminary injunction temporarily staying the Phaneuf plaintiffs' action from going forward, pending a determination by me on the other 87 litigants' claims under the standards articulated by the circuit in Jackson Dairy (sic) and its progeny (sic).

My findings of fact, conclusions of law, and bases for the exercise of my discretion will be summarized now and more fully set forth if you decide you want to take an appeal. All of the facts with respect to the Phaneuf plaintiffs' claims have not been fleshed out, and I make findings today for the purpose of this analysis based solely on undisputed ones. It is said to me -- and I have heard not dispute -- that Ms. Phaneuf, Lisa Phaneuf, purchased a 2006 Chevy, which was a vehicle manufactured by Old GM.

Page 1, excuse me, of your complaint, alleges that the ignition switch action is brought against New GM, successor and interest to Old GM. On page 12 of the opposing brief, New GM points to 6 matters alleged in your complaint, speaking of events that took place in February 2005, April 2005, June 2005, March 2005, April 2006, and in 2003. Each of those circumstances is, to state the obvious, an event that took place before the formation of New GM.

Those allegations, if proven, might have relevance to a punitive damage claim, which we've now agreed has been asserted here, but they do not describe events taken place by New GM. I do not make any finding as to the extent, if any, to which New GM assumed such liabilities, but I do find them sufficient for me to form a view that they raise at least serious issues as to whether there is material reliance on matters that took place before the sale order.

Putting it another way, the applicability of the sale order has been established in the first instance, at least for the purposes of your clients' claims. For the avoidance of doubt, I make no finding as to the extent to which these allegations or any others would be probative or relevant in any of the other 87 litigations.

That is not to say, of course, that what the sale order says now will be the end of the inquiry, either in your case or in the case of the other 87 actions, but what the matters that I discussed before show is that the sale order applies in the first instance. By reason of the due process contentions the other litigants want to make or otherwise, the sale order may turn out to self-destruct, a matter as to which I make no finding today, but, for now, it's in place, at least vis-à-vis your clients.

(Pause)

THE COURT: Then I am required to consider or should consider, not so much as a matter of law, but as a matter of my discretion, whether I should make an exception for your clients, notwithstanding the prima facie applicability of the sale order, on the one hand, or whether I should treat them with those who are or who are likely to be similarly situated, on the other. I think that making an exception for your clients would be monumentally bad case management, from my perspective.

You heard for a period of about three hours a back and forth as to what makes the most sense, case management-wise, for some very complicated issues, which it would be manifestly inappropriate for me to make findings on, pro or con, for or against any party. To step out of that template and make early findings without giving them the opportunity to be heard and where the issues are of the complexity that people argued in good faith from many different approaches would be extraordinarily ill-advised. To the contrary, every principal of case management that judges are taught causes them to, on the one hand, try to deal with issues where all concerned have the ability to be heard and also to prevent one client or one group of litigants to get ahead of the rest in a way that has the potential for prejudicing the remainder.

Just as Mr. Steinberg tried to avoid making statements in this proceeding after so many of the other affected lawyers left, the same principles that underlie that decision, which if he hadn't done it voluntarily, I would have asked him to do, underscores that one client shouldn't be -- or litigant group -- shouldn't be making arguments ahead of everybody else. And that's so, in this court, even without considering whether Judge Furman might have the same view as to those matters that I do or not.

Finally, I determine that, even if my earlier order hadn't been entered, it would be appropriate to enter a preliminary injunction, limited in duration until I've ruled, preventing the piecemeal litigation of the Phaneuf plaintiffs' claims now ahead of all of the other lawsuits that are similarly situated. While I don't have a complete record, it's foreseeable, if not obvious, that at least a subset of the 87 other litigants are going to present the same issues, and that's the exact reason why the MDL action came into being where the cases before Judge Furman were determined by the MDL panel to be sent to a single judge for pretrial matters and explains how they originally came to be before Judge Furman.

When issues raise overlapping -- excuse me. When actions raise overlapping issues, even if they're not wholly congruent, coordinated disposition is essential, and I don't rule out the possibility -- in fact, I assume it to be true -- that the facts you present, Mr. Block and Mr. Garber, may not appear in every one of those 88 cases, but the chances that they're not going to be present in at least some of them are remote. While I well-understand the desire of litigants both to get their cases moving as quickly as possible and -- though I don't know if it's your desire here -- to put yourself in a desirable a position ahead of others -- might occasion your desire to get this relief, they are insufficient to trump the normal case management concerns that I and most other judges would have.

With respect to the applicability of the sale order, I find, for reasons I articulated before, that New GM has raised serious issues going to the merits. I don't need to, nor do I, find that New GM has a likelihood of success on anything else. In fact, I don't want to make such a finding, because it would prejudice the litigants in the other 87.

But, as we know, under the standards of Jackson Dairy and its progeny, the standards for a preliminary injunction in the Second Circuit require irreparable injury and a likelihood of success or, once irreparable injury has been established, serious issues going to the merits and a tipping of the equities or the hardships decidedly in favor of the party that's seeking the injunction.

Management concerns and the prejudice to the litigants in the other 87 actions, has been plainly established, and, because, as is apparent from Judge Furman's order of June 16th, including, among other things, that he's trying to put his cases in an orderly way, just as I am, and that he provided in his paragraph 16 on page 14 of his order, that he would be doing a stop, look, and listen to await -- or at least to consider -- any rulings by the bankruptcy court or any higher court exercising appellate authority over the bankruptcy court. The chances of him wanting to proceed in a piecemeal manner with respect to only one litigant and to exempt that litigant from other matters that he prescribed in his order have not yet been shown to me, if they ever will be.

So, for all of these reasons -- and, no offense.

I'm not doing anything to you, other than saying that you're going to be treated like everybody else. The Phaneuf action will not be proceeding ahead of the other 87. I'm so ordering the record, but I am expressly giving you an extension of the time to appeal for my oral order until I enter a written one.

I am going to ask you, as I indicated early on, to think about whether you want to take an appeal, because I don't want a clock to start running against you on the appellate time instantly. I want to give you the opportunity to think about it, and, though I don't know if anything I say comes as much of a surprise to anybody, if you do take an appeal, I may wish to confirm and amplify upon some of the points I made.

Lastly, vis-à-vis Grumman Olson, I've read and I think I understand Grumman Olson, but I want to minimize the extent of the findings that I make with respect to it now. For now, I want to limit it to say that, with lawyers of the quality who argued before me this morning, it is inconceivable to me that they won't be raising Grumman Olson as well and that Mr. Steinberg will wish to be heard with respect to Grumman Olson as well and that fairness to the entire plaintiff community requires that I not deal with Page 98 1 Grumman Olson issues piecemeal. Just as you wanted to argue 2 it, I think it's at least foreseeable, if not certain, that 3 they will as well and that I don't want to make any rulings 4 based on Grumman Olson without giving them a fair 5 opportunity to be heard with respect to it also. 6 So, not by way or reargument, do we have any 7 questions or matters that I need to clarify? 8 MR. BLOCK: Not from us, Your Honor. 9 THE COURT: Okay. 10 Mr. Steinberg: 11 MR. STEINBERG: No, we're good. 12 THE COURT: Thank you. Then, Mr. Block, you and Mr. Garber are free to go 13 or stay, as you prefer. I think I have one other matter, 14 15 which is the Elliott plaintiffs. I'm going to deal with 16 them now. 17 So come on up, please, folks. 18 MR. STEINBERG: Thank you, Your Honor. THE COURT: And I can make a guess as to who you 19 20 are, but maybe I can get a formal appearance. 21 MR. HORNAL: Daniel Hornal, representing the 22 Elliott plaintiffs. 23 THE COURT: Right. I had suspected as much. 24 Thank you, Mr. Hornal. 25 And, Mr. Steinberg, again, I assume?

MR. STEINBERG: That's correct.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, I have a tentative here, and I want to share it with both of you.

My tentative -- and this gores your ox a little more than Mr. Hornal's, Mr. Steinberg -- is that I well-understand that the Elliott plaintiffs, when they weren't represented by counsel, entered into a stay stip. under which they were part of the other 87, but historically, I've had a sensitivity to the needs and concerns of pro se litigants and the fact that they sometimes screw up.

Frankly, in this case, I think that, although they may have screwed up by voluntarily entering into this stip. without the benefit of legal counsel, it's giving away ice in winter because of the Phaneuf ruling that I've just issued, but my tentative, subject to your rights to be heard, is to relieve them of the stip. temporarily to treat your case, Mr. Hornal, as a tag-along action of the type which I approved in the very first uncontested motion today and to give you the opportunity, if you can, to show that your action is any different than the other 87, including now Phaneuf and to consider my ruling that I just issued in Phaneuf to be stare decisis, that is a precedent, vis-a-vis your effort to get them special treatment but not res judicata or collateral estoppel.

I do want you to think about whether you want special treatment after the ruling that I just dictated, because frankly, I think that you'd have to throw a hail Mary -- throw and complete a hail Mary, Joe Montana style, if you're old enough to remember him -- to succeed when the able counsel for the Phaneuf plaintiffs failed. But that's the way I see it, gentlemen.

Frankly, if your clients hadn't been pro se at the time, I would hold them to the stip., but, under the circumstances, that's the way I see it, and I'll give each of you an opportunity to be heard in opposition to my tentative. Either way, I assume that, by the time you're done, each of you will be heard.

Come on up, please, Mr. Hornal.

MR. HORNAL: Thank you, Your Honor. Just to clarify, so our client -- we have submitted a request to amend the complaint with the district court.

We are fine with this procedures going forward, and I appreciate the opportunity to develop our no-stay arguments formally, but we want to make sure that the no-stay arguments will be not due until after the district court accepts the amended complaint, because it's going to be very difficult to try to argue based on the pro se.

THE COURT: I see that as an issue that would be decided by Judge Furman rather than me. And I say, Judge Furman, by the way, and not the D.C. Court because I cannot Page 101 for the life of me see what the D.C. Court can properly be doing in a situation like this. But, again, that may be a Judge Furman issue and not mine. So, if what you're asking is, would I permit, my approval wouldn't necessarily be the only approval necessary. Would I permit you to amend the complaint and then ask Judge Furman for permission, I -- my tentative is to say that from perspective, that's okay but I want to hear Mr. Steinberg's view so I (indiscernible). MR. HORNAL: I'm a bit confused. I -- perhaps I can clarify with some of the procedural things that have happened so far which is --THE COURT: Put that mic close to you, please, Mr. Hornal. MR. HORNAL: Oh, of course. My -- I believe that prior to us being retained as counsel, a motion was made to add the Elliotts to the MDL and the MDL panel rejected it. That's why it's currently and still in the D.C. District Court.

THE COURT: Did it state the reasons for the rejection?

MR. HORNAL: It simply said it is not appropriate. I don't believe it issued a lengthy opinion. Since that --

THE COURT: And you're theorizing that it might be because the way the Elliott plaintiffs had originally drafted it, it was so unintelligible that it might not have reflected the commonality of issues that would be a normal requirement for sending a case on an MDL basis somewhere else?

MR. HORNAL: I certain wouldn't characterize my clients' complaint as unintelligible but it certainly was difficult for some people to understand and it's very possible that the -- I can't -- I should speculate on the MDL Court's reasoning. I only know that they sent it back.

Since that time, we have made a motion to amend our complaint. There is a motion to dismiss pending from the defendants. The -- and I believe just last night the -- GM has moved to pull us back into the MDL based on the amended complaint even though the amended complaint hasn't been accepted.

Basically, all I'm asking, Your Honor, and since, at this point, procedurally the amendments in front of Judge Jackson in D.C., whether or not she will accept the amendment, it seems the most sensible thing to do would be for us to file our no stay papers soon after Judge Jackson's accepts the amendment to the complaint, assuming she does, which I -- we believe she will.

THE COURT: If you got leave to file the amended complaint, would you then be filing no stay papers or would you be satisfied with the treatment that the Phaneuf

Page 103 1 plaintiffs got? 2 MR. HORNAL: Your Honor, our legal theories are considerably different from the Phaneufs and the other 87 3 4 plaintiffs and I believe we would be filing a no stay. 5 THE COURT: You think you thought of something 6 that 87 other lawyers didn't? 7 MR. HORNAL: I'm quite confident we did, Your 8 Honor. 9 THE COURT: Okay. Mr. Steinberg, your 10 perspective, please. 11 MR. HORNAL: Thank you, Your Honor. 12 MR. STEINBERG: Your Honor, to some extent, this case is an easier case for you to stay than the Phaneuf 13 case. The Elliott car is a 2006 Chevrolet Cobalt and a 2006 14 15 Trail Blazer. So they're both --16 THE COURT: But they have two cars. 17 MR. STEINBERG: They have two cars. THE COURT: Both of which were manufactured prior 18 to 2009? 19 20 MR. STEINBERG: That's correct. So he may have a 21 theory but it's -- the predicate is an old GM car and the 22 issue is whether, under the MSPA, new GM assumed whatever 23 his theory is. 24 The second thing is to clarify, I've been told by 25 my colleague, and it's in our papers, that the clerk of the JP MAL (ph) did not accept the Elliott pro se action to be part of the MDL because it was a pro se action. That's our belief. It was a pro se action and the clerk didn't really understand and therefore didn't tag it.

We filed out motion and they will have 21 days to oppose it, if they want, but we think, clearly, when you review the amended complaint, it's ignitions -- I can find the word ignition switch on almost every page of a 53 page complaint.

The third thing is, we should actually be clear as to what is going on here. This is not a situation where they're just amending a complaint to make it clearer from a pro se viewpoint. And this wasn't excusable neglect.

When counsel came onboard, he had conversations with my co-counsel at Kirkland and Ellis and they filed the request to amend the complaint anyway, instead of coming to Your Honor. As they say, they probably should have gone and dealt with this as a no stay pleading or move to vacate the stay stipulation.

That complaint that they filed was not a clarification of what the Elliotts did. It was a request to turn that into a class action. The Elliotts didn't file a class action. Counsel decided that he wanted to do that. Counsel is advertising the ability to sue GM on his email and he writes on his website, if you're registered on one of the following GM cars in the District of Columbia, or if you commute to work to the District of Columbia, you may be entitled up to fifteen hundred, even if GM fixes your car.

Then they cite to the GM recall lawsuit and they refer to the fact that, due to the ignition switch defect, GM has recalled, and then it lists the car that were recalled and then it says, the defect causes the ignition switch to move into the accessory position shutting down the engine, power steering, and power brakes and sometime causing problems to lose control of their cars. The same allegation that everyone in the 87 plaintiffs says.

The ignition switch can be moved to the accessory or off position from anything from a bump in the road to a heavy keychain. This has caused many deaths, serious injuries; so often these bumps occur immediately before a major accident, and upon impact the airbag does not deploy.

GM has already acknowledged that you were aware of the defect for a decade but didn't tell the public until recently. Even if you have not been injured, you may be entitled to up to fifteen hundred dollars. To evaluate your claim, contact, essentially us.

So this wasn't excusable neglect to amend the complaint. This was purposeful. This was turning this into a class action and this is a fee opportunity for them. They may have a theory but, believe me, it's no different than any other theory that has been asserted by any of the 87 plaintiffs. It actually is the same 1(e) issue that we had before, which is if they want to claim that the new GM is responsible for something that happened relating to a 2006 vehicle, even if it doesn't involve an ignition switch, it's -- if it's the compressor or something else like that, which is also in their complaint.

So maybe the MDL takes it or maybe it doesn't.

But it implicates the MSPA. It's implicates your sale order injunction. It's a pre-petition vehicle and old GM's view and I say it, I say it with the same caveat I had before, the MSPA listed three categories for which we assume everything else we didn't assume. This doesn't fall into any of the three categories.

I won't argue anything more than that other than that I'm happy for them to treat this as a no stay pleading. I'm happy to make the same arguments that I did in the Phaneuf action. I actually think they should be withdrawing their class action complaint. If they actually want to refile an Elliott complaint that is specific only to the Elliotts and not new parties and clarifies what a pro se plaintiff would do, I probably would consent to do that as well, too, so that there's a clear pleading onboard.

But I'm not consenting for them to go forward, make this a class action, come ahead of everybody, and assert causes of action that everybody else and the 87 plaintiffs were prepared to do. I'm not prepared to concede that.

THE COURT: All right. Mr. Hornal. Before you're done, I want you to know whether you admit or deny what Mr. Steinberg argued viz-a-viz now seeking to represent people beyond the Elliotts and whether this is not beyond protecting the interests of the pro se plaintiffs.

MR. HORNAL: Your Honor, we are soliciting clients for other cases. Those cases have nothing to do with the Elliotts. The Elliotts filed pro se. We had no contact with them when they filed pro se. We -- as I mention in the papers that were filed with this Court, we were retained in mid-June by them. We did contact them after we saw that they had filed pro se because we figured they needed help. But that's the -- I was actually sort of boggled that that would even -- that our law firm's actions outside of, you know, in soliciting clients in accordance with D.C. law would have anything to do with the Elliotts' claim.

I don't want to spend too much time on the merits of whether or not we should have a no stay. I simply -- I feel the need to respond simply because there was such an extensive presentation by GM.

THE COURT: Well, you may need to do a little,
Mr. Hornal, because doctrine in the Southern District of New York, and the Second Circuit, says that to be relieved of a default, and that's in substance what you're asking me to give you relief from, because you're asking for relief from a stip that your client signed, requires both excusable neglect and the showing of the meritorious claim or defense.

I well understand the point that we don't like to beat up on pro se's and that might provide the basis for the excusable neglect prong. But the meritorious defense or claim part would, at least seemingly, require, unless you can show me some case law authority to the contrary, that you have some plausible argument for being excused from the sale order or for contending that it doesn't apply.

MR. HORNAL: Absolutely, Your Honor.

I'm sorry. I was looking through the complaint right now to find the specific quotations trying to help with that.

THE COURT: I mean, if we are talking about vehicles that were manufactured in about 2006, I am scratching my head to see how you're going to do that.

MR. HORNAL: Your Honor, our primary claim is based on the Consumer Protection Procedures Act which is a District of Columbia law.

THE COURT: Is that what?

MR. HORNAL: The Consumer Protections Procedures

Act. It is a District of Columbia law.

All of our claims is -- are -- very explicitly disclaim any liability based on successor liability or anything based on the purchase. Rather, we're only looking to hold GM liable for its own actions and misrepresentations, the new GM, since its inception. We do intend to introduce evidence about what happened in old GM. We only -- to prevail in our legal theories, we only need to show that new GM knew about the problem and failed to disclose it. That's the basis for our claim.

In our complaint, we specifically say, plaintiffs are not making any claim against the old GM whatsoever and plaintiffs are not making any claim against the new GM based on having purchased its assets from old GM or having continued the business or succeeded old GM. Plaintiffs disavow any claim based on the design or sale of vehicles by old GM or based on any retained liability of the old GM.

Plaintiffs seek relief from new GM solely for claims that have arisen since October 19th, 2009, and solely based on actions and omissions of the new GM.

So I don't -- once again I would appreciate an opportunity to develop this more fully on papers but that's a -- an idea, basically the idea of what we're trying to do and the basis of our claim, which is, in our opinion, quite clearly, quite different from the claim you've -- or the notes that you argued on earlier today, or that you ruled on earlier today, excuse me.

As to the procedure going forward, you know, our client did enter into this stipulation. Our client didn't know what it meant. The stipulation specifically says it was a -- negotiated between counsel for both sides, which he wasn't represented by counsel. And, furthermore,

Judge Jackson rejected the stipulation. So I actually -- I argue we're not in default in any way. We file -- my client agreed to file a stipulation. It was filed and it was rejected.

My client doesn't have the option of simply stopping to litigate the claims particularly when GM has a pending motion to dismiss. So we had to deal with that when we came into the case and it was clear from talking to our client what the proper form of relief was and the proper complaint would be and that's what we have asked the District Court to accept as an amendment.

We do not intend to do any sort of any end run around the procedures here. We do not intend to, you know, try to engage in early discovery or something like that.

Rather, we simply want an opportunity to, based on the complaint, assuming it is accepted for filing, to file a no stay pleading and have our -- be heard.

THE COURT: Mr. Steinberg.

MR. STEINBERG: Your Honor, we attached his amended complaint to our letter of July 1 and if you look at paragraph 37, 38, 39 -- I'm sorry, start with paragraph 40. It's the paragraph that starts with: class action allegations.

So I know counsel really didn't answer your question when you had asked him, but he filed a class action complaint and the original action brought by the Elliotts was on behalf of the two individuals.

Paragraph 41 of his amended complaint lists the cars that are implicated as to the defined affected vehicles and you can see you have Chevrolets, Pontiacs, Saturn, Buicks -- all -- Cadillacs, all involving pre-petition vehicles and some post-petition vehicles. But mostly pre-petition vehicles. That's his affected class.

Our argument is that this class action can't go forward. This will end up being in the MDL. We're confident that that will be the case. But it all is because he took an action with knowledge of the sale order injunction and we believe for the reasons that you gave on the Phaneuf action that the sale order injunction was implicated, he was required to come here and that was the practice that he should have followed and he didn't do that. And Justice Jackson rejected the stipulation and said file a motion instead, that's our practice. And we prepared the motion for him to deal with it.

First of all, the stay stipulation applies whether it's filed with a Court or not. So, the pro se client was actually bound by it just as a technical matter.

The second thing is the stay stipulation requires them to do those acts that are necessary to implement the stay stipulation which meant that they were required to consent to the motion. We prepared the motion. We gave them the motion. He refused to comment on the motion.

Instead filed the complaint before Justice Jackson and is now soliciting clients to try to sue new GM with respect to pre-petition vehicles.

That's what's happening here. I agree with Your Honor insofar that if the tentative said he wants to file a no stay stipulation in view of the Phaneuf ruling. Fine. Let him do it. Let him articulate what his theory is and we'll respond. But don't, in effect, take advantage of the fact that you violated the sale order and injunction, give something and then say, that's why I want to announce the truce. He should be required to withdraw that action and I said before, if he wants to clarify an individual action on behalf of the Elliotts, let him do that. I think we would consent if this was an individual action on behalf of the Elliotts. It will say ignition switch on almost every page.

That's what this complaint says as well, too.

THE COURT: All right.

Page 113 1 MR. HORNAL: Your Honor, if I may, I --2 THE COURT: No. I've heard plenty, Mr. Hornal. I 3 don't know if I gave you two or three opportunities to be 4 heard but every argument must come to an end. 5 MR. HORNAL: We did consent on the motion I just 6 wanted to say. 7 THE COURT: Forgive me, Mr. Hornal. MR. HORNAL: I apologize. 8 9 THE COURT: I don't get cranky about a lot of 10 things but I really get cranky about getting interrupted. 11 MR. HORNAL: I apologize, Your Honor. 12 THE COURT: When I have the fuller, factual exposition that I got by reason of oral argument, I see that 13 my tentative was only partly correct and I'm going to amend 14 15 it. 16 The rationale for my tentative was driven by my 17 normal desire to avoid penalizing pro se plaintiffs for 18 inartful pleading and to allow them to keep alive claims that, while they might have dubious merit, at least against 19 20 new GM, under principles similar, if not identical to those in the Phaneuf ruling, might warrant giving them a day in 21 22 Court. But it was that alone and for that reason I'm going 23 to allow the Elliotts' complaint to be considered as a tag-24 along action for the purpose of protecting those two pro se individuals only but no more than that. And, therefore, for the avoidance of doubt, when we settle an order to this effect, which I'm going to ask Mr. Steinberg to draft, it may provide, as Mr. Steinberg argued that the two Elliott plaintiffs get the benefit of the ability to make the further arguments that consideration as a tag-along action would allow them to make. But no more than that.

So we're going to give the Elliotts, themselves, relief from the stipulation that they entered into, but nobody else. Therefore, if you want to proceed for their benefit as a non-class action, as what in substance is an individual action, you can do that, Mr. Hornal.

But when a Judge, like me, excuses somebody from the legal consequences of what he's done, there is no basis in law or logic for then opening up the doors to anything more than that which is necessary to protect the pro se plaintiff.

Mr. Steinberg, you're to settle an order in accordance with that. You may include such matter as you regard appropriate so long as it's not inconsistent with anything I've said.

MR. STEINBERG: your Honor, I wanted to make sure, if I can include that counsel be directed with the withdrawal his class complaint that he seeks to amend and that if he wants to amend it, to limit it only to the individuals and thereupon he will be stayed until his no

Page 115 1 stay action will be ruled upon. 2 THE COURT: Yes, you may. That's implicit in what 3 I said, but if you want to make it explicit, you may. 4 MR. STEINBERG: Thank you, Judge. 5 THE COURT: All right. There be no further 6 matters with respect to Motors Liquidation. I'm on the 7 bench for a long time. We adjourned. (Chorus of thank you.) 8 THE COURT: Wait. Is somebody on the phone who 9 10 has some other matter? 11 MR. KANOVITZ: Yes, hi. This is Mike Kanovitz. I 12 represent plaintiff Gillispie. 13 THE COURT: You're not very audible but I sense that you're counsel for Mr. Gillispie? 14 15 MR. KANOVITZ: That's correct, Judge. 16 THE COURT: Were you able to hear when I called 17 your matter earlier this morning? 18 MR. KANOVITZ: No. What I heard was you would take us up at the end of the day. I've been sitting on the 19 20 phone. 21 THE COURT: Okay. 22 MR. KANOVITZ: I apologize if I somehow missed 23 that. 24 THE COURT: All right. Well, no apology is necessary or at least I'm going to excuse you from not being 25

matter was that an agreement had been reached for a briefing schedule to address your client's concerns, which was to be papered in a stipulation or consent order to which you would be a signatory along with the others. And, assuming that the schedule for addressing those matters as in the written stip, which I gather reflects an agreement with you, is satisfactory, I'm going to so order the stip or enter the consent order.

MR. KANOVITZ: (Inaudible), Judge. That all sounds correct. We've reached an agreement on schedule by emails back and forth and I know that will get reduced to stip.

THE COURT: Okay. Are you on a landline because I'm having a lot of trouble hearing you?

MR. KANOVITZ: Yeah. I actually am on a landline.

I've been in my basement this morning listening -- I don't know how it is that I missed the call but, yeah, I got off a couple times when you said we were taking a break but -- anyway. Yes, I am on a landline.

THE COURT: Okay. Well, that disposition should cause you no prejudice. When you get the stip, look at it, make sure it fairly reflects your deal and when you countersign it, along with the other parties, I'll so order it.
